U.S. Phone Strike Called for Feb. 8

False Faith In H-Bomb Is Feared by Lilienthal

Other 'Weapons or Non-Weapons' Might Be Neglected, Is View of Chairman

The hydrogen bomb issue before the Nation is not the "naked" one of simply "to build or not to build" it, according to Atomic Energy Commission Chairman David E. Lilienthal.

Furthermore, Lilienthal indicated, he does not oppose the weapon "in principle," or on moral grounds.

His feeling, as it seemed to emerge from a news conference yesterday, is rather that the H-bomb by itself is not the full answer to Russian achievement of the plutonium bomb.

And his concern, it appeared, is that America may pin false faith in the H-bomb and neglect the other "weapons or non-weapons" that can really give it security.

No Other Interpretation

Lilienthal did not state this concern in so many words at his regular monthly meeting with the press. But there seemed to be no other interpretation that would fit what he did say.

Heretofore, he has been widely represented as objecting to the making of an H-bomb, hundreds of times more powerful than the A-bombs used against Japan, on moral grounds.

He took pains yesterday to show that this was not the case.

Actually, it is believed, Lilienthal does not oppose making the H-bomb if Russia embarks on its manufacture too. His worry seems to be that to make the H-bomb, and rest on that, will mean fatal failure to "balance" the defense effort with other means.

Meanwhile, Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee joined the growing ranks of congressional leaders demanding the bomb be built without delay.

He said there is "every reason to believe" Russia will soon begin H-bomb experiments, and warned that if Russia gets one before this country does, "it could conceivably lead to war."

The question of the H-bomb came before another forum yesterday, that of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. The committee, in closed session, heard Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, head of the AEC's General Advisory Committee of top atomic scientists.

Like Lilienthal, Chairman Brien McMahon (D., Conn.) of the congressional group for the first time acknowledged the existence of the Issue Now Hits Street

H-Bomb 'Hush' Part Of Purposeful Plan

(The first of a series)

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

So few facts are available to the public on the hydrogen bomb that public participation has been almost nil in the raging intragovernment debate about it.

In small part, this circumstance has been the result of secrecy requirements for national security. In main part, however, it has been the result of a deliberate plan.

When the issue of building the superbomb was revived last fall, the Administration design was to effect a temporary suspension of public discussion of it.

Reasonable men can differ on the wisdom of this policy. If it were a purposeful attempt to forbid, permanently, the application of democratic processes to this momentous issue, it could be condemned outright.

If, as seems more likely, it was intended as only a temporary period of silence, there is room for argument on its propriety.

Its defenders can say that the responsibility for making the initial recommendation on whether to try for a new weapon scores of hundreds of times more devastating than the atomic bomb rested unavoidably with the President.

His action, whatever it was, could be only a recommendation. Then the people and Congress, in democratic debate, could decide whether to accept or reject it.

Therefore, it is argued, it was proper and wise to leave the President free for a while from partisan and irresponsible clamor and haranguing.

It was proper to afford him peace and quiet while he wrestled with his own conscience in making a choice that The Washington Post has said "may be the most cosmic that has confronted any Chief of State in war or peace in American history."

But whether that policy of suspending public discussion was right or wrong is now academic. The question is now front-page news.

As a basis for coming to his own conclusions on the matter that involves his and his country's life, the citizen has only part of the necessary facts.

He is in something of the situation of a palezoologist called on to reconstruct a creature from the evidence of nothing more than a fossilized thigh-bone. Or of a primitive tribe that must assess the menace it faces when it discovers some footprints and a random arrow stuck in a tree.

It can be hoped that in some

Three Escape 4th Floor Cell At Rockville

Three men held at the Rockville (Md.) Jail on charges of housebreaking and larceny used a metal bar and blankets to escape from their fourth floor cell last night.

Escaped are: John E. Coffin, 23, charged with four cases of housebreaking; Robert L. Caldwell, 20, charged in three cases, from Carderock, Md., and Walter F. Williams, 18, 1116 F st. nw., charged with safe robbing.

Pvt. George Bodmer of the Montgomery County police found that all three prisoners held in the same cell were missing.

Bodmer said they pried open a bar in their cell window, dropped to the third floor roof, then used a rope of blankets to reach the ground.

He said they escaped sometime between the 7 p. m. and 12 p. m. Monday cell checks. A three-State lookout was broadcast and Washington police were watching roads leading into the city.

Williams was being held in connection with the burglary of two Montgomery County service stations and questioning in the last month of a safe from the Duvall Motor Co., Damascus, Md.

Coffin and Caldwell were charged in Bethesda Police Court yesterday with housebreaking and larceny in the theft of $38 worth of liquor from the Montgomery County Dispensary at 6100 MacArthur blvd., on January 12. They waived a preliminary hearing.

Caldwell was described as short and thin with blue eyes and brown hair. He was wearing a sport coat, brown pants and cowboy boots. He has a scar on his thumb.

Williams has brown hair and eyes, weighs 140 pounds and is 5 feet 6 inches in height. No description of clothing.

Coffin has a scar on the bridge of his nose. He was wearing faded Army khaki and has brown hair and blue eyes. He is about six feet tall and weighs 165 pounds.

Acheson Asks Restoration Of Korea Aid

Secretary of State Acheson personally started an Administration push yesterday to restore the 60-million-dollar fund for Korea, which the House rejected by a one-vote margin January 23.

The Secretary went before the House Foreign Affairs Committee to support a new bill combining aid for Formosa and Korea in a single package.

One part of the bill would extend until June 30 the authority to spend ECA funds already appropriated for Nationalist China. At present there is a time limit to February 15 for spending this money, of which about 103 million dollars remain.

Since there is no longer any Nationalist China on the mainland, the money is being used entirely in Formosa for economic relief and recovery. A bill to extend the time limit to June 30 has already been introduced in the Senate by Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is expected to act on it today.

The second part of the new House bill authorizes 60 million dollars for economic recovery in Korea until June 30. This part was passed by the Senate last October by a 48-to-13 vote, and now

Jap Diet Members Barred by Boston's Council as 'Spies'

Boston, Jan. 30 (AP).—The Boston City Council today barred from its meeting 14 representatives of the Japanese Diet sent to the United States for reorientation in democratic principles.

Councillor James F. Coffey, a World War I veteran, introduced the order that barred the Japanese legislators, with this statement:

"We are feeding them, clothing them. But don't educate them so that they can start another war in a few years."

The 14—including 10 Diet members and four of the Diet's secretariat—went to City Hall to observe a meeting of the City Council, but were turned away after the council closed its doors.

Fears in GOP May Defeat Abolition of Electoral College

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Fear of its effect on the Republican Party's political future may kill the bipartisan proposal to abolish the Electoral College with its unit rule method of electing the President.

Backers of the Lodge-Gossett Constitutional amendment, to be voted on by the Senate at 3 p. m. Wednesday, figured yesterday they can win the votes of two-thirds of the Democrats. But a two-thirds vote of all Senators voting is necessary to put the proposal before the State Legislatures. The amendment also has yet to reach the House floor, where another two-thirds vote is necessary.

The Republican split broke into the open on the Senate floor yesterday when Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) delivered a lengthy speech against the proposal. He said it would bring the "breakdown of the two-party system as we know it," would alter the "whole pattern of the American system" of Government and by indirection would surrender State sovereignty.

Ferguson said he wasn't against the proposal because of any fear of any adverse effect on any political party." But he went on to say the argument that the Republicans would gain by opening the South to the two-party system was "pure speculation."

The amendment would retain the present number of each State's electoral votes but would split them just as the popular vote is divided. At present the high man gets the entire electoral bloc.

Nation Open To Attack, Johnson Says

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson yesterday warned that the United States could be attacked "from the opposite hemisphere without warning and with unpredictable fury."

And he and other military chiefs, in a report on the Nation's defenses, made it plain we do not now have the means to block such an assault and must rely on a mighty counter-blow to deter an aggressor.

Johnson, however, declared that the United States today is "more formidable" than ever before in peacetime and voiced belief that the danger of war is receding.

Prospects "Improving"

"While we must recognize the bitter truth that there can be no real peace and security so long as our free world is blighted by the sinister shadow of an aggressive totalitarian power . . . we have good reason to believe that the prospects of averting another world conflict are steadily improving," he said.

In his first annual report as Secretary, Johnson declared that "we must face the fact that as a democracy we do not fight until attacked." Therefore, he continued, we must be alert as possible and possess the means to "retaliate with rapidity and force."

Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force chief of staff, in an accompanying report, spelled out the counter-blow concept more specifically.

"Because of the great and increasing range and speed of modern airplanes," he stated, "it is not possible to impose absolute limitations upon the effectiveness of attacking forces nor is it possible to protect, with certainty, any significant target or group of targets.

Might Risk Major Loss

"Because of the tremendous power of new weapons, the damage that can be inflicted by a successful attacking force may be so great as to justify the possible loss of a major portion of that force.

"Increasing efforts must be directed toward the development of our defensive capabilities, but under present circumstances, and under any circumstances that can be dependably predicted, the total damage that can be done to an enemy by an effective counter-attack far exceeds the damage caused by destroying a high percentage of his attacking forces."

Johnson noted that the present appropriations for national defense are a "heavy burden on the Nation's taxpayers."

"It is obvious, however," he continued, "that we cannot continue indefinitely, on the current scale, our expenditures for atomic bombs, ships, planes, guns and tanks, and for the forces to man them, without depressing our standard of living by thus diverting funds we should necessarily spend for food, clothing

Vast Potato Destruction Under Study

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The Department of Agriculture is considering engaging in the greatest deliberate wholesale destruction of food in history in the next few weeks.

The Commodity Credit Corp., food-buying agency for the Government's farm price support programs, has to buy and get rid of around 50 million bushels of late potatoes within that time.

It has tried several methods to dispose of them. It has offered them free to the National School Lunch program, which has taken all it can use; to federal, state and local public and charitable institutions, to local charities, and to the Indian Bureau, without success. It also has offered unlimited amounts to charities sending food to hungry areas abroad. It has offered to sell the potatoes at one cent a hundred pounds for export by commercial exporters—sacked in bags that alone cost 12 to 15 cents apiece.

Alternatives Listed

The only alternative to destroying the spuds is to convert them to commercial alcohol, starch, cattle feed or potato flour. This would cost an additional sum for shipping them to the plants for conversion.

Methods of destruction considered are soaking them with oil and burning them, soaking them with chemicals and coloring matter to make them unfit for human consumption, or dumping them where they will freeze and rot and later plowing them underground.

The Farm Law of 1949—sometimes called the Anderson Act for its author, Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. M.), former Secretary of Agriculture, directs CCC to support the price of potatoes at 60 percent of parity.

Has Spent $30 Millions

This means about $2.10 per 100 pounds, or roughly about $1.25 a bushel.

CCC already has spent about 30 million dollars on the 1949 crop. It still has to buy 45 to 50 million bushels—about half in one county, Aroostook County, Me.

Those already bought have been disposed of as follows:

About 1,800,000 bags (100 pounds) or 3 million bushels, to direct distribution. This includes free disposal to the National School Lunch, Government and charitable institutions.

About 8,200,000 bags or 13.6 million bushels, sold at 1 cent per 100 pounds for livestock feed. In many cases the Government paid freight charges on this amounting to many times the total price it got.

About two million bags to starch, glucose and potato flour mills—also with freight subsidized by the Government.

Before it gets through, CCC expects to lose between 95 and 100

Alexandria Man Who Killed His 3 Children Ruled Insane

By Robert P. Jordan
Post Reporter

John Steven Conner yesterday was ruled to have been insane when he shot and killed his three children last December 6 in their Alexandria home.

A sanity commission found that the 39-year-old former West Pointer was of unsound mind, then and now. Under Virginia law, he must be committed to a mental institution within five days and thus will never stand trial for the shotgun slaying of his children, Stephanie, 11, Michael, 9, and Cecelia, 5.

The commission, composed of Corporation Court Judge William P. Woolls and two Alexandria physicians, Drs. J. C. Watson and Jerome Baum, deliberated 17 minutes before returning the verdict. In handing it down, Judge Woolls said, simply:

"The commission has come to the conclusion that Mr. Conner is of unsound mind at this time and that he was of unsound mind at the time of this occurrence."

The tribunal's finding came after a four-hour hearing in which Conner, a $7000-a-year-civilian engineer at Fort Belvoir, listened impassively while his wife, Janet, 34, related the details of the morning tragedy.

She said she "was awakened by the sound of the gun, got out of bed and went into the front room. I saw my husband firing a gun for the third time.

"He turned toward me—he was

Dr. Montgomery to Get Full Pay As House Chaplain Emeritus

The Rev. Dr. James Shera Montgomery yesterday retired as chaplain of the House of Representatives after serving in the post for 29 years.

Dr. Montgomery, who is 87, was named chaplain emeritus of the House, which also voted to give him his full salary of $2350 for life.

The Rev. Dr. Bernard Braskamp, pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, 16th and Newton sts. nw., was named to succeed Dr. Montgomery.

Dr. Braskamp has served as acting chaplain of the House as a substitute for Dr. Montgomery more than 175 times during the past 10 years.

In addition, he was chaplain of the Senate during the 1948 special session of Congress, substituting for the late Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall.

U. S. Workers Barred From Perjury Jury

An unusual decision to bar as jurors all persons who work for the Government snarled selection of a jury yesterday in the Harold Christoffel perjury trial.

Christoffel is charged with lying in telling a congressional committee he had never been a Communist or ever had Communist connections.

Federal District Judge F. Dickinson Letts agreed to a motion by O. John Rogge of defense counsel to exclude all persons who work for the Government, or even have near relatives who do.

As a result, at the end of the first day the jury had been only partially selected after 70 prospective jurors had been called. Judge Letts asked that additional veniremen be in the panel box Tuesday morning.

Letts himself excused 50 of the 70 veniremen before the Government began to exercise its six peremptory challenges and the defense the 10 assigned to it. Rogge later told reporters he knew of no other case where Government employes were so excluded.

Since the majority of persons employed in Washington work for the Government, or have relatives who do, this one factor made it certain a large number of veniremen would be called before the 12-man jury could be selected.

This is the second trial of the Crash Landing Hurts 3 Airmen In Yukon Search

Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—A. U. S. Air Force C-47, participating in a mass two-nation search for a C-54 transport missing four days with 44 persons aboard, crash-landed in the Yukon wilds today injuring three of the six men aboard.

The pilot of the search plane, Lieut. Charles Harden, Anchorage, Alaska, said he was forced down about noon some 17 miles south of here. He was discovered walking along a desolate road tonight by two Whitehorse men while many Canadian and American aircraft were searching for both Harden's plane and the C-54 transport. The C-47 was reported missing after being overdue several hours.

The C-47 was based at Elmendorf Base, Anchorage, Alaska. It arrived here Sunday.

Crisis in Coal 'Hours' Away, Byrd Declares

Senator Byrd (D., Va.) yesterday demanded that the Senate call on President Truman to crack down on the coal strike immediately or risk "a critical situation in a period of hours."

Even as the Virginian spoke in the Senate, Mr. Truman was believed poised to step into the worsening situation after a warning hint of White House intervention failed to halt new walkouts.

There was official silence, but presidential aides kept tab on the strike. It spread among nearly one-fourth of John L. Lewis' 400,000 soft-coal diggers in the face of reports that Mr. Truman might act if they didn't return at once.

Urges T-H Law Use

Byrd urged use of the Taft-Hartley law to halt the strike, declaring that "with cold weather forecast throughout the East, as well as the North and West, we may have a critical situation in a period of hours."

Byrd laid before the Senate a resolution that, if adopted, would urge the President to use the act, under which he can ask the courts for an 80-day injunction to keep the United Mine Workers producing coal.

The resolution would not require House concurrence and it would not compel Mr. Truman to follow its recommendation, but Byrd said it would be "profoundly persuasive."

Byrd's resolution was similar to one pigeonholed last Friday by the Senate Labor Committee, 6 to 5. He introduced it and asked that it lie on the table, a maneuver to keep it from going to committee but allowing it to be called up any time by majority vote.

Calls Truman "Stubborn"

The Senator called Mr. Truman "stubborn" and asserted that "everybody in the country except the President and the labor leaders knows that a national emergency exists."

Tactics followed by Lewis are "menacing the general welfare of the American people in the dead of winter," Byrd said in denouncing the three-day work week instituted by the union leader.

Lewis, in Washington, maintained silence.

Earlier, Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross said that Mr. Truman had nothing to add to what he had already said about the coal situation. The President has stated

Traffic Light Plea Lost, Man Mourns Son Killed at Spot

The cars rush quickly past Park rd. on Lee blvd. in Arlington Forest, Va.

There is no traffic light. And that for four years has concerned the men of the community.

Their wives and children must dash and weave across the boulevard to reach their homes.

Among the men aroused is Howard W. Lehman, assistant scoutmaster of Troop 148 of the Arlington Forest Methodist Church, employe of the Internal Revenue Bureau, and a man of responsibility in Arlington Forest.

He wrote the Virginia State Highway Department about the traffic light that was needed. This was last spring.

"Are we going to have to wait," his letter inquired, "until a child is killed to have some action?"

At 4:20 p. m. last Friday, a boy was killed—just as Howard Lehman had warned.

The child was his son Fred, 12. He got off a bus at the intersection. He walked onto a safety island, then stepped off and was struck and killed instantly.

Fred attended Thomas Jefferson Junior High. He was a Boy Scout. He belonged to his father's troop—No. 148. All his scout pals were at the funeral, and served as pallbearers.

Fred is survived by a brother, John, 8, as well as his mother and father. Their home is at 117 S. Aberdeen st.

Fred was buried yesterday in Columbia Gardens Cemetery. Arlington Forest Methodist Church was filled.

The family, in its deep grief, asked that instead of flowers, donations be sent to the March of Dimes.

100,000 Told To Walk Out If 7 Demands Are Not Met

350 D. C. Workers Included; Beirne Pledges Emergency Service in Tieup

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

A strike of more than 100,000 telephone workers in various sections of the country was set for 6 a. m. February 8 by the Communications Workers of America (CIO) yesterday.

The effect of the walkout will be "a general strike of all the telephone industry," because 220,000 additional telephone workers will respect strikers' picket lines, Union President Joseph A. Beirne declared.

The 100,000 employes, who will walk out over seven major disputed demands "unless the situation changes," include 350 equipment installers, salesmen and warehousemen in Washington.

Every Exchange Affected

Practically every telephone exchange in the country will be picketed, Beirne said.

About 150,000 more workers will be technically eligible to join the walkout on March 1 under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, he said.

Among these are more than 5700 Washington employes, including 2150 operators and clerical workers, and 3530 plant, accounting and commercial employes with the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., as well as about 100 long lines employes of American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

Others in this category are employes of the C. & P. Co. of Virginia and the C. & P. Co. of Baltimore.

Pledges Emergency Service

Beirne, who recently called on all CIO members to "over-use" the telephones if the strike comes off to jam the phone system, said yesterday CWA members will maintain an emergency service for "doctors, nurses, fire, police and other telephones needed to prevent injury to individuals, to prevent damage to property, to aid the sick, and so forth."

Spokesmen for Washington Division 36, representing the plant, accounting and commercial employes, and Washington Division 50, covering operators and clerical workers, said their units "most emphatically" would respect picket lines set up by other CWA members.

These divisions will open negotiations on Wednesday with the telephone company on requests for "substantial" increases in wages, changes in hours of work, and other demands.

The 350 telephone workers here eligible to strike on February 8,

D. C. Burlesque To Sing Swansong As Gayety Closes

The Gayety Theater, Washington's emporium of "bumps and grinds," will close this week.

Bernie Ferber, manager of the 9th st. burlesque theater, announced that lack of interest in the art of strip tease is closing the doors. The final curtain in the theater's 44-year history will fall Thursday night, he said.

The theater whose patrons once upon a time included Congressmen and Government bigwigs, has suffered declining audiences since the war.

Manager Ferber blamed rising costs and a "lack of new customers."

"We still have a lot of faithful patrons," he said. "But we haven't been able to attract new business."

It was a far cry from the days when there weren't enough "strippers" to keep the season going as long as business warranted.

The burlesque house weathered the war years when many performers were in USO units and withstood attacks by church and civic groups. But when a local ordinance decreed the girls must stay pretty much dressed, interest in the burlesque art waned.

$30 Pension for All Of Aged Is Proposed

2 Bills Seek To Aid Small Businesses

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

Two Administration leaders moved yesterday in the Senate to implement President Truman's call for Government aid to small business.

Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.) introduced a bill giving Government backing to loans for individuals and small enterprises.

"This bill in effect authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corp. to guarantee up to 90 percent loans made by private banking institutions to individuals and small enterprises to encourage the growth of new enterprises on a sound basis and provide existing small business firms with long-term capital when it is needed and when it cannot be obtained from any other source."

Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.) introduced a measure providing for the appointment of a small business coordinator to work directly under the President. The coordinator would receive $15,000 a year to dovetail the activities of all Government agencies "in furtherance of the interests of independent small business concerns."

Both Lucas and Maybank noted that in his State of the Union message earlier this month President Truman asked Congress to aid small business.

Lucas quoted the President as saying, "we must provide aids to independent business so that it may have the credit and capital to compete in a system of free enterprise."

By the United Press

William R. Williamson, former employe of the Social Security Administration, said yesterday the entire social security program is a "flop" and should be replaced by $30-a-month pensions for all the aged.

He was the first witness before the Senate Fianance Committee to oppose a House-passed bill to expand social security coverage and increase pension benefits.

Williamson, who said he was a social security actuary from 1936 to 1947, called the whole program an example of "Santa Claus thinking" which insults Americans by "assuming incapacity and lack of will power."

"Old-age and survivors' insurance promises every man a bargain," he said. "Public assistance promises every State a 'liberal subsidy' from the Federal Government in meeting local responsibilities."

Terming the House bill a "flop," he urged "no more tampering with an intrinsically bad law until a thorough study outlines the logic of a sound program."

His proposal: $30-a-month old-age pensions for everyone, and return to the States of all responsibility for caring for the needy.

Brown Advises That F.D.R., Jr., Stay in House, Not Night Clubs

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Representative Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. (Dem.-Lib., N. Y.) yesterday was singled out for House Republican attack as party politics and personalities further clouded the FEPC issue.

Representative Clarence Brown (R., Ohio), one of the key GOP members of the House Rules Committee, slapped at Roosevelt's House attendance record, accused him of "mistatements of fact," and said:

"No one can learn the rules of procedure for this House in any New York night club."

Brown replied for his party to a Saturday night New York Democratic "victory dinner" speech by Roosevelt, in which he charged Republicans have "openly allied themselves with the Southern Dixiecrats in an effort to block this FEPC legislation."

Last week Representative Adam Clayton Powell, jr. (D., N. Y.), filed a second FEPC discharge petition, charging, one already filed by Roosevelt was "ill-timed" and designed to further Roosevelt's gubernatorial ambitions.

The House Rules Committee meanwhile postponed until next week another tussle on the FEPC issue tentatively scheduled for today. The Roosevelt petition to "discharge" the Rules Committee had only 93 signatures, against 218 required. Powell's petition had only 35 signatures.

Referring to young Roosevelt as "Junior," Brown told the House that the son of the late President "was absent . . . or failed to respond" on 69 of the 129 roll calls in the House since he has been a member.

Roosevelt was not on the floor at the time of the speech and no Democrat rose to reply to Brown. Brown told the House he tried to contact Roosevelt and was advised by Roosevelt's office that he could be reached at a New York phone number.

"No one can solve any of the great social and legislative problems which confront us by nocturnal meditations on 52d St.," Brown said. "To do so we must all stay on the job right here."

What touched off Brown's attack was this statement in Roosevelt's New York speech:

"Senator Taft's campaign manager, one Mr. Clarence Brown of Ohio, who only the week before had pledged to the Civil Rights Mobilization Conference in Washington that he would vote FEPC out of the Rules Committee, forgot to practice what he preached and voted with four Dixiecrats only last Tuesday against FEPC coming out of the Rules Committee."

Brown denied (1) that he was Taft's campaign manager, (2) that he had ever appeared before or made a pledge to the Civil Rights Mobilization. He said Roosevelt failed to explain that Brown voted as he did in the Rules Committee "to protect two of my Republican associates" and later moved to reconsider the vote "to keep this FEPC bill alive for further consideration by the Rules Committee."

Commenting on a Washington Post editorial suggestion that Republicans file an FEPC discharge petition, since they decline to sign Democratic petitions filed by Roosevelt and Powell, House Labor Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) challenged Republicans to file such a petition and said he would sign it. But Republican House Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr. (Mass.) said there is no point in filing a third petition, even if it were possible under House Rules.

Maragon Plea Fails to Beat Indictment

A motion by John Maragon for dismissal of the indictment charging him with four counts of perjury before a Senate subcommittee was rejected yesterday by District Court Judge T. Alan Goldsborough.

Maragon's attorney, Irvin Goldstein, argued that 14 of the 23 members of the grand jury, which indicted him, were employed in Government departments directly in the province of the Senate subcommittee which was investigating influence-peddlers here and before which he allegedly perjured himself.

"I don't think Government employes should sit on any jury where the Government is involved in the case, but the statute says they can. There is nothing more I can say," Judge Goldsborough stated.

Goldstein also argued that the indictment failed to allege a quorum was present at the subcommittee hearing and that the indictment did not state facts constituting a crime.

Judge Goldsborough granted part of Goldstein's motion for a bill of particulars, in which he asked to be told what government business Maragon allegedly negotiated between 1945 and July, 1949, as charged by the prosecution. He was overruled in his requests to be told the amounts of money Maragon is accused of receiving for this business and the names of those who employed him when he went to work for the State Department on a mission to Greece.

Foley Charges Fallacy in Realty Claims

Denying that the real estate interests are providing sufficient housing for the middle-income group, Raymond M. Foley, Housing Administrator, urged Congress yesterday to accept the Administration cooperative housing program.

Foley appeared before the House Banking Committee in support of the measure introduced on the House side by Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) and in the Senate by Chairman Burnet Maybank (D., S. C.).

Foley said middle-income breadwinners cannot raise a family in the kind of house they can afford. Answering arguments of real estate groups, Foley said:

"There is one further matter which I would like to emphasize at this point. Various attempts have been made recently to prove the middle-income housing market is being served adequately and therefore the additional aids which would be provided by this bill are not necessary.

"In each instance the attempted proof involved a fallacy resulting from the misuse of national averages. This attempted proof was based on the fact that a given percentage of all the housing produced in the country during 1948 or 1949 was sold or rented at prices or rentals which were within the means of a given percentage—and it is always stated as a substantial percentage—of all American families.

"The fallacy inherent in this argument is that it balances off the low-cost homes, most of which are produced in the South and in parts of other sections where prevailing construction costs and income levels are lower or where savings in home construction are possible because the climate is milder, against the housing needs of middle-income families in higher-cost areas, such as New York, Chicago or Detroit."

Foley said many homes coming into the market are simply not large enough to house the families of middle-income groups.

Much Exaggerated Toll Reported

Tehran, Iran, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Official quarters today said reports on casualties in earthquakes and floods in southern Iran were highly exaggerated.

Both the Tehran radio (which is official) and the Iranian Red Lion Society, corresponding to the Red Cross, had reported 1000 persons killed in an earthquake in the bushire area.

Tehran radio, the Red Lion Society and an official report from Zahidan, over by the Pakistan frontier, reported 500 persons killed in floods there.

But official sources here said only 42 persons were known dead in both the quakes and the floods.

U. S. to Recognize Viet Nam Regime

In Jerusalem

International Holy City Is Proposed

Geneva, Switzerland, Jan. 30 (AP).—Roger Garreau, French president of the United States Trusteeship Council, proposed today the creation of an international city of holy places within Jerusalem.

Delegates of Iraq and the Philippines immediately attacked the plan, declaring it a repudiation of the U. N. Assembly's resolution of last December 9 to internationalize the whole city. The council's task is to carry out that resolution.

Garreau countered that the Assembly resolution was open to various interpretations and that his plan was "a liberal and reasonable interpretation."

King Abdullah's Jordan and Israel now occupy the city. Both have gone on record against internationalism.

Israel's Parliament last week adopted a compromise resolution declaring the "historic fact" that Jerusalem automatically became the Israeli capital on the day of Israel's independence but not going so far as to claim all Jerusalem.

Under Garreau's proposal the international city would be a small area, with small and scattered areas outside.

Almost all the new city, with the station and railway from Tel Aviv, would remain under the sovereignty of Israel.

The Arab quarter of the old city, together with the Haram-el-Sherif, Wadi-el-Joz and Bab-el Zahira sections, all of Jericho rd., the Nablus rd. to north of Sheik Jarrah, and the Hebron rd. to south of Bethlehem would remain under the sovereignty of Jordan.

The international city would be taken in almost equal parts from the Israel and Jordan occupation zones.

It would have a United Nations "governor of the holy places," an international police force and its own court with the Trusteeship Council appointing the chief justice. It would fly the United Nations flag, and its people could keep their present nationality or choose citizenship of the international city.

The Administration has made up its mind to recognize the semi-independent, French-sponsored government headed by the former Emperor Bao Dai in Indo-China.

It will do so despite the fact that Indo-China's independent neighbors—India, Burma, Siam, the Philippines and the new United States of Indonesia—are still cool to Bao Dai and unwilling to recognize him.

The neighboring governments feel the Bao Dai regime is not truly independent, since it does not have full control of its own defense and foreign affairs.

Held Only "Alternative"

he American position is that Bao Dai is the only alternative to communism in Indo-China; that he has shown ability to keep order and win public support in a large part of the country; and that his non-Communist nationalist movement deserves and needs American support.

The present plan is for Britain to make the first move, and for the United States to follow.

Recognition was foreshadowed in a friendly statement made to Bao Dai last week by Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, now on a survey mission on behalf of Secretary Acheson. The text of Jessup's message was released yesterday by the State Department.

It expressed the "confident best wishes" of the United States Government "for the future of the state of Viet Nam, with which it looks forward to establishing a closer relationship."

Agreement Ratified

Viet Nam is the name of that part of Indo-China to which the French government transferred semi-independent powers in an agreement signed last March. The agreement became effective earlier this month, and was ratified by the French National Assembly last weekend.

"My Government believes," Jessup went on, "that the people of Viet Nam and the people of France are to be congratulated on this development.

"The Secretary of State has also asked me to express his personal hopes that Your Majesty will succeed in your present endeavors to establish stability and prosperity in Viet Nam."

At present, a French army of 180,000 men is protecting the Bao Dai regime from a Communist-led army in the north under Ho Chi-minh. Communist China and the Soviet Union have already recognized Ho as the rightful ruler of Viet Nam.

Until recently the United States preferred to wait until the neighboring non-Communist countries had recognized Bao Dai. Now, however, the State Department is convinced that Bao Dai is worth encouraging for the same reasons that prompted American support of the new United States of Indonesia.

Recognition Timetable

The timetable of recognition is as follows:

The French Council of the Republic (corresponding to the Senate under the old Third Republic) still has to ratify the agreement with Bao Dai, and President Vincent Auriol must approve the ratification. Both these steps are likely this week.

Next, the nations of the British Commonwealth, except for India, are expected to give Bao Dai de facto recognition—that is, recognize that the Bao Dai regime exists in fact and establish diplomatic relations with it.

At their recent conference in Colombo, Ceylon, the foreign ministers of the Commonwealth agreed to take this step as soon as France had ratified. The only one who stood aside was Prime Minister Pandit Nehru of India.

British recognition will come, according to present plans, soon after Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin returns from Colombo on February 5.

If the British recognize de facto, as dispatches from London indicate, the United States will do the same.

There is still no enthusiasm here for Bao Dai personally or for the prospects of his regime.

Korean Aid Funds Urged

reaches the House for belated action there.

Acheson's appearance in open session drew such a crowd of reporters that long lines of spectators waited in vain to get into the packed committee room.

Fireworks had been expected because of the Secretary's statement last Wednesday about the conviction of Alger Hiss. Two of the committee members, Representatives Walter Judd (R., Minn.), and Lawrence Smith (R., Wis.), had attacked him bitterly in published statements.

But the questioning in the public session was of the mildest sort; and after the committee had questioned Acheson further behind closed doors Chairman John Kee (D., W. Va.) said it had been an "amicable" meeting.

The Secretary told the committee that stopping American aid to Korea would have "a most unfortunate effect" on all of southeast Asia.

"It would raise very grave questions as to the extent and the consistency of American interest in that area," he said. "The Koreans have done nothing whatever to warrant stopping American aid.

"We believe the United States has a very considerable responsibility in Korea, and we feel Korea has excellent possibilities of being self-supporting."

The Secretary thought it was "a safe guess" that the Korean government could resist any attack from the Soviet-controlled northern part of the country.

"Of course," he quickly added, "it stands to reason that no nation of 20 million could resist a major attack by a country of 400 million"—meaning Communist China. The Secretary said there were no indications of an attack from northern Korea.

West Java Rule Is Wiped Out as Result of Revolt

Jakarta, Jan. 30 (AP).—The state government of West Java was wiped out today as a result of the evolt of the outlaw utch guerilla leader Capt. R. P. P. Westerling.

The legislature of troubled West Java voted unanimously to ask the central United States of Indonesia government at Jakarta to take over the state administration.

In rapid succession since Westerling's forces invaded the West Java capital of Bandoeng last Monday, State Premier Anwar Tjokroaminoto was arrested on orders of the Federal Minister of Defense, his cabinet resigned and Wirana Takusumah, head of the state, turned in his mandate.

Federal administration of the state clears the way for Indonesia's Republicans to realize their objective—merger of all Java into one state government.

Vice Consul Believed Crossing Himalayas in China Flight

By the United Press

American Vice Consul Douglas L. Mackiernan is making a hazardous trek across the snow-capped Himalaya Mountains to escape from Communist China, the State Department revealed yesterday.

The 36-year-old official fled from Tihwa, China, last September 27 en route to Kashmir, on the border of India. Nothing has been heard from him since, but the department pointed out that the trip might take three months or longer by camel caravan.

Mackiernan's perilous journey came to light after the Communist radio in a Peiping broadcast charged he was serving as an American "spy" and stirring up guerilla revolts against Red rule in the remote back country of China.

Tihwa is the capital of Sinkiang Province—one of the northern China areas that the State Department has accused Russia of taking over.

United States Consul J. Hall Paxton was recalled from the Tihwa consulate last August 15, leaving Mackiernan the only American there. When Red armies entered the town a month later, Mackiernan set out by camel caravan to Kashmir.

State Department Press Officer Michael J. McDermott said the trip normally takes from 60 to 85 days in good weather. Now that winter has filled the Himalaya passes with huge snowdrifts, he said, there is now way of estimating how long it will take.

Mackiernan was born of American parents in Mexico City. He went to high school in Stoughton, Mass., and later was graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

After five years' wartime service in the Army as a lieutenant colonel, he entered the State Department's foreign service and was sent to China in 1947.

France Signs West German Trade Pact

Paris, Jan. 30 (AP).—France and Germany signed a pact today for the exchange of 300 million dollars worth of goods in the next six months.

A French Foreign Office statement said the real extent of trade that will result is not known, however, because the agreement provides that about 60 percent of the types of goods to be exchanged will be free of all government controls.

Baron Vollrath von Maltzahn, who signed for Western Germany, described the agreement as "decisive progress toward the Marshall Plan goal for trade liberalization in Europe" and in "implementation of the Bonn government's decision to create good relations" with France. He hopes to sign trade agreements with Britain and Italy soon.

Western Germany and France negotiated on the pact for two months. Two weeks ago it became involved with the Saar question. German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer said nationalistic sentiments, inflamed over the status of the German valley, made agreements more difficult.

Last week, however, Adenauer declared the unity of Europe was more important to Germany than the Saar.

Sinkiang Joins Moscow Talks With Chinese

By Eddy Gilmore

Moscow, Jan. 30 (AP).—A delegation from Sinkiang, China's westernmost province, arrived today to take part in Soviet-Chinese Communist negotiations, an official announcement said.

Sinkiang has a long frontier bordering on the Soviet Union. It is one of the four areas of Northern China which United States Secretary of State Dean Acheson charged on January 12 that the Soviets are annexing to the USSR. This charge subsequently was called false by Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky and Chinese Communist leaders.

(Later the United States State Department reiterated Acheson's charge, releasing at the same time documents in support of the accusations.)

The official announcement said the delegation was headed by Seisutdin Ayzizov, deputy chairman of the "Sinkiang People's Government," and included three others. It added the group had come to "participate in the work of the delegation of the Chinese People's (Communist) government."

Other Chinese now in the Soviet capital include Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tze-tung and his Foreign Minister, Chou En-lai. Mao arrived 45 days ago and Chou January 20.

Ayzizov's arrival led to speculation that Soviet-Chinese Communist talks have progressed. It was recalled that several northern Chinese provincial officials had come with Chou.

There has been no official announcement on how the talks were progressing or what was being discussed beyond Mao's statement that the existing Chinese-Soviet friendship alliance is one of the principal topics.

This is the first time in many years that representatives from Sinkiang have come to Moscow to negotiate with the Russians. It is what one Western diplomat called a "very interesting development."

Scandinavians Join British in Financial Union

Paris, Jan. 30 (AP).—Uniscan, a limited financial union of Britain, Sweden, Norway and Denmark, was born in Paris today.

The agreement was signed for Britain by Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Foreign Ministers Osten Unden of Sweden, Halvard Lange of Norway and Gustav Rasmussen of Denmark.

The most important provision of the accord—a provision that all but Norway put into effect immediately—was to take off the limits on tourist spending among the four countries.

Up to now, British tourists could spend only 50 pounds ($140) a year outside the sterling area.

Norway said she was unable to grant increased allowances of foreign exchange for tourists at present.

The accord provides that "all four governments will allow current payments to be made without restrictions between their four countries.

Prague Theaters Show More Foreign Films

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—A survey of the city's 74 theaters today showed that fans have a greater chance than ever before to see films made in the United States, Britain and other Western countries.

Thirty-six theaters featured pictures from the United States, Britain, Holland, France and the Scandinavian countries. Russian movies, including the Stalin prize film "Stalingrad," were showing in 21 theaters. The others featured Czech films.

Senate Probe Of Denfeld Case Ended

The Senate Armed Services Committee last night wrote "closed" on its probe of the ouster of Admiral Louis Denfeld as Chief of Naval Operations.

Chairman Millard Tydings (D., Md.) announced the findings after a five-hour, behind-closed-doors quizzing of Navy Secretary Francis Matthews into the circumstances surrounding the case.

In a statement described as representing the "sentiment of the group" Tydings said:

"The committee was satisfied that no rule of the Navy nor the attitude of the Secretary of the Navy would prevent any officers from giving his views openly and freely to a congressional committee without fear of reprisal or punishment.

"Furthermore, an officer may—within the rules and regulations of the Navy—write or speak in public, but what he speaks or writes naturally is his own responsibility."

The Maryland Senator said Matthews testified that Denfeld was removed "as a result of an honest difference of opinion on Navy Department policy" between the two.

Quizzed for an explanation of the statement that an officer may "write or speak in public" but that what he says "naturally is his own responsibility," Tydings said:

1. An officer not in a "chain of command" responsible for carrying out policy "can say what he wants to."

2. But an officer charged with carrying out policy set by his superiors must "adapt himself" to such policy or be transferred.

3. But the Senators "tried for an hour" to draw a rule on who was covered by the ban and who wasn't and then "agreed that each case must stand on its own bottom."

Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.), who pressed for a recall of Matthews for further questioning in the case, said he had only one comment to add.

Knowland declared his main interest was the right of the minority of the committee to call witnesses for unrestricted questioning, and that this right—even for a single member—had been acknowledged. He agreed no further hearings were necessary but added he wanted to explore one further point.

That was the legal right of the President to delegate authority to a subordinate to remove an official appointed by him and confirmed by the Senate for a statutory post.

Berlin Road Truck Traffic Normal Again

Berlin, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Truck traffic on the superhighway west of Berlin rolled along normally today and the Russian-imposed "little blockade" appeared to be over.

West German police reported no backlog at Helmstedt, where long-drawn out "inspection" of each truck last week caused traffic to pile up for miles on both sides of the zonal border.

Police said Soviet and Communist frontier guards were passing 10 to 15 Berlin-bound trucks an hour today, enough to provision Berlin and take care of its commerce, as compared with the two to four trucks while the slowdown was on.

Asked if the "little blockade" was ended, American transport chief Charles A. Dix replied, "Your guess is as good as mine."

Maj. Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, United States Berlin commandant, said Soviet harassing tactics will "happen over and over again" until the Reds drive the Western powers from Berlin.

"Their long-term objective is complete domination of Berlin," Taylor asserted.

Taylor said the Russians were trying to "blockade the confidence of business" in Berlin. West sector papers reported last week that because of the traffic slowdown some west German business firms had broken off negotiations with Berlin companies, while others demanded delivery date guarantees in contracts.

Dix said all waterway traffic was held up by frozen canals, but trains were traveling in and out of Berlin normally. Police said about 60 eastbound trucks waited for clearance at Helmstedt last night, but the line had been taken care of by 6 a. m. today.

The Russian-sponsored Berliner Montag said traffic was controlled to assure compliance with the ban on "dismantling (of machinery) and the robbery of vital raw materials."

Britons Believe Labor Will Win, 2 Polls Indicate

London, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—British voters—regardless of party ties—believe the Labor Party is going to win the February 23 general election, it was indicated tonight.

The formal campaign starts Saturday, after King George dissolves Parliament Friday.

But intensive activity already is under way and Conservative leaders are worried over indications that even many Conservative voters believe the Laborites will win.

Two public opinion polls, by Liberal and Conservative newspapers, showed steady Labor gains today. The Liberal one gave the Laborites an edge over the Conservatives for the first time since April.

More significantly, the one taken by the Conservative Daily Express showed 62 percent of all persons polled thought Labor would win.

AFL Hits Denham For Teamster Talk

Tells How Strike Will Affect Nation

Harris & Ewing
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
... President of union

General Counsel Robert N. Denham of the National Labor Relations Board said yesterday the Teamsters Union (AFL) has a "complete hold" on "every segment of the Nation's business."

He received a quick reply from angry leaders of the American Federation of Labor, who charged that Denham is campaigning to apply the anti-trust laws to big labor unions.

Denham spoke at an American Trucking Associations forum on trucking labor relations at the Hotel Statler here.

He said that if the "giant" Teamsters Union could concentrate its control, "as most of the other organizations do, under a single master-type agreement or formula pattern for collective bargaining," there would be "no measuring" the economic force and power of the Teamsters in this country.

Could "Dwarf" Others

The union's power, he said, is sufficient to "dwarf the economic power of those so-called monopolistic giant unions," the United Mine Workers, Communications Workers and United Steelworkers.

Denham, who is the man charged with enforcing the Taft-Hartley Act, said "we still have a long way to go" before realization of what "seemed to be the congressional intent" to curb abuses of union power.

The AFL Executive Council, meeting in Miami, postponed discussions of the Truman Fair Deal program and labor's political action after hearing of the Denham speech.

Denham Held "Unfit"

The council declared Denham has stamped himself as the "antagonist of organized labor and the protagonist of the employers." The speech has added "further conviction" that Denham is "unfit to continue in his present position," the council statement asserted.

Dan Tobin, Teamsters president, and AFL President William Green told reporters Denham's views were "absolutely unfounded" as the Teamsters have never exercised a combined strike power.

Green said any charge that the Teamsters Union is monopolistic is "particularly unfair" because, he said, that union has contracts only of a local or regional nature.

Joint labor bargaining by several employers was criticized by William B. Barton, director of employer-employe relations for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Robert Ramspeck, executive vice president of the Air Transport Association, and Leo Teplow, associate director of industrial relations, National Association of Manufacturers.

Phone Strike Set Feb. 8

who are employed by the Western Electric Co., telephone equipment suppliers, have been negotiating for a new work contract for weeks, with no agreement.

The local telephone company quickly reacted to the strike announcement by charging that the CWA "airily brushes aside the fact that in many areas, bargaining negotiations have not even started."

Talks Haven't Started

A statement by C. H. Johnson, C. & P. Telephone Company vice president and general manager, pointed out that in Washington, negotiations are not scheduled to begin until February 1 with the operators' and plant workers' unions.

"No dispute exists between this company and local unions," Johnson declared, "yet Mr. Beirne plans to establish picket lines around our exchanges and prevent employes who want to work from going to their jobs to provide telephone service."

Quoting Beirne's statement in a letter to the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. that in the event of a strike he hoped that "telephone management will not obstruct" the provision of emergency telephone service, Johnson declared:

"Mr. Beirne well knows, as do all telephone employes, that emergency calls cannot be recognized as such until they are handled. Complete, efficient service, whether it be emergency or otherwise, can be maintained only if operating forces stay on the job in the public's interest.

"We have no way of providing emergency service to the exclusion of other kinds of service if telephone employes strike or honor picket lines established by others.

"In the event of a strike, we will do our utmost to provide telephone service."

Negotiations Continue

Beirne said negotiations over the seven major demands of the union have been continuing for different periods of time in the various divisions, some having started talks with their telephone company as far back as May, 1949.

Beirne listed the major demands of the union as a general wage increase, a 35-hour work week, shorter apprentice periods, narrowing of wage differentials for identical jobs in different parts of the country, improved pension and vacation provisions, and paid time off to vote.

Besides the Nation-wide Division 6 of Western Electric installation men and Division 18 of Western Electric distribution employes, units listed by Beirne for the February 8 strike included those in the Mountain States, Southwestern, New Jersey, Washington State, Idaho and Oregon telephone companies, and two Western Electric plants in North Carolina.

Beirne said the telephone workers' union was far better equipped now for a strike than in 1947, when it was an independent group of 49 autonomous unions. A six-week strike at that time ended without achievement of the union's goals.

Crisis in Coal Declared Near he will act when he determines a national emergency is at hand.

A report that intervention might come by Tuesday night went undenied. A presidential adviser put it this way: To prevent White House action, all miners must go back to at least a three-day week.

Lewis cut his men back from five days to three a week late last year to trim down coal stocks and get his contract terms accepted. But operators stuck together and miners began quitting altogether to force a showdown.

89,575 Estimated Out

The Associated Press estimated that at least 89,575 stayed away from work today, as compared with 88,000 who struck three weeks ago. Most of these were in West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Presidential intervention might take the form of appointment of a fact-finding board—either under the Taft-Hartley labor act or not.

A Taft-Hartley board would study the situation, but could make no recommendation. Mr. Truman then could ask an 80-day injunction against a coal strike in an attempt to gain a settlement.

But Mr. Truman also could appoint an independent fact board empowered to make suggestions of a basis for agreement. He did so in the 1949 steel strike and its report led indirectly to new contracts. Generally, it is expected he would follow this formula. He has condemned the Taft-Hartley law.

Rule Snarls Jury Selection

Milwaukee defendant on identical charges. He was convicted in 1948 of falsely testifying before the House Labor Committee in 1947, but the Supreme Court last summer, in a 5-to-4 decision, reversed the case.

The high court ruled it had not been proven that an actual majority—or quorum—of the committee had been present and heard Christoffel testify. Thus, the Government in the present trial will seek not only to prove that Christoffel lied about Communist connections—but that at least 13 members of the committee heard him.

Due to Dennis Appeal

Rogge told reporters that his request to the court that Government employes be excluded was due to an appeal now before the Supreme Court of the conviction of Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the Communist Party, for contempt before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

He said the appeal in the Dennis case was based in part on the charge that in a case involving communism a defendant cannot obtain a fair trial where a juror is employde by the Government.

John S. Pratt, a Special Assistant Attorney General and chief government prosecutor, did not object to Rogge's motion.

Machinists, UAW Ban Raids

Two of the Nation's largest rival unions yesterday announced a "no raiding" peace pact through Secretary of Labor Tobin.

Walter A. Reuther's United Auto Workers, with nearly a million members, and the International Association of Machinists, with about 600,000 key craftsmen in auto, airplane and other industrial plants, signed the armistice.

Each agreed not to seek members where the other has bargaining rights.

The machinists, an independent union which broke away from the AFL in 1946, had boosted its membership to around the million mark during the war after the AFL gave it jurisdiction across-the-board for airplane plants. At the same time, Reuther's CIO-United Auto Workers were battling for the right to speak for the mushrooming airplane industry.

The two big unions crashed head-on during the war but their quarrels were controlled by the War Labor Board and the National Labor Relations Board. After the war, when the airplane industry cut back severely, the machinists union lost heavily, but it fought gamely to hold on to what it had or to expand in other plants. The warfare was severe.

Secretary Tobin, who made the announcement as a neutral third party, hailed the pact as "a major contribution toward industrial peace through the removal of unnecessary jurisdictional disputes."

Bill Increasing Cotton Acreage Expected to Pass House Today

While Agriculture Department officials were wondering what to do with about 50 million bushels of surplus potatoes, the House yesday was considering a bill to liberalize recent acreage cuts ordered in cotton.

The bill would add from 1½ to 2 million acres to this year's cotton production—or from 25 to 50 million dollars to the cost of this year's price support program for cotton.

The measure the House is expected to pass today also replaces many acres in peanuts that were removed from production in a recent acreage reduction ordered by Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan.

A similar measure to add several million acres to next year's wheat acreage is being considered by a House Agriculture subcommittee.

During discussion of the cotton measure, Congressmen from Southern cotton States assured members from wheat States they would support the wheat bill. They also assured Representatives Charles B. Hoeven (R., Iowa) and Leslie C. Ahrens (R., Ill.) they would support a similar measure for corn when that commodity is ordered under acreage allotments by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The bill would correct inequalities in the acreage allotment law discovered as the result of its operation in different States.

Coplon Trial Figures Turn 'Actors'

New York, Jan. 30 (NYHT).—A 6-foot Federal Bureau of Investigation agent played the part of 5-foot Judith Coplon today at her spy trial to illustrate an important point. A deputy marshal had the role of her codefendant, Valentin A. Gubitchev.

Before a jury in United States District Court, Agent Daniel F. Garde and Deputy Marshal Martin Norton, who is 7 inches taller than the 5-foot-1-inch Gubitchev, played their parts.

Garde left the stand to demonstrate what he saw the night of January 14, 1949. In an official FBI report, he wrote he saw Miss Coplon "on several occasions striking at" Gubitchev "with her hand or folded newspaper. Today he refrained from using the words "striking at," but substituted "gesticulating vehemently."

Both had their backs to the jurors as the agent stroked the air several times—without touching his brother actor—to indicate what he had seen.

The defense claims that Miss Coplon and Gubitchev were in love with each other, rather than espionage conspirators, and that she struck at the Russian engineer because he had just told her he already had a wife.

Vast Destruction of Potatoes Facing Decision Here Soon

million dollars on the 1949 potato crop. This amounts to about $275,000 a day for each day of 1949—or $8,200,000 a month.

(This is about 50 percent more than the 62 million dollars cost of the entire legislative branch of the Government in 1949. It is about the same as the annual cost of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.)

Even at this terrific cost it is less than half the cost of a year ago. In the crop year ending last June it cost the taxpayers more than 225 million dollars to keep the domestic price of potatoes high. One result of the high prices was a reduced consumption. The per capita use of potatoes last year dropped to only 106 pounds—the lowest in history, and about 15 percent below recent years.

Last year millions of bushels of potatoes were converted to commercial alcohol and potato flour. Part of this was delivered to the Armed Services for use in occupied areas.

In carrying out the price support program CCC is obeying definite orders of Congress. Up until a few weeks ago CCC estimated the potato program would cost around 60 million dollars. However, the production of late potatoes was far greater than earlier estimates.

CCC agrees to take over the surplus potatoes whenever the growers are ready to deliver—limited only by its means of disposing of them. Recently, particularly in Maine, growers have offered delivery.

Their supplies had been held in the hope that they could get more than the Government guarantee on the open market. The greater production than expected, however, held prices down to about the price support level.

Aecently some of the potatoes are reportedly showing signs of deteriorating in farm storage. This has forced many farmers to offer them to CCC.

Reuther Shooting Trial Under Way After 21 Months

Detroit, Jan. 30 (AP).—After five delays, Carl Bolton finally went on trial today in the Walter Reuther shooting 21 months ago.

Bolton, slim former vice president of a CIO United Auto Workers local, is charged with assault with intent to kill the UAW president. He already is serving 10 to 15 years for burglary of a store in nearby Pontiac, Mich.—his third felony sentence.

A crowd jammed into Recorder's Judge O. Z. Ide's courtroom as the long process of picking a jury got under way.

Interviewing of the prospective jurors indicated the prosecution would base much of its case on circumstantial evidence.

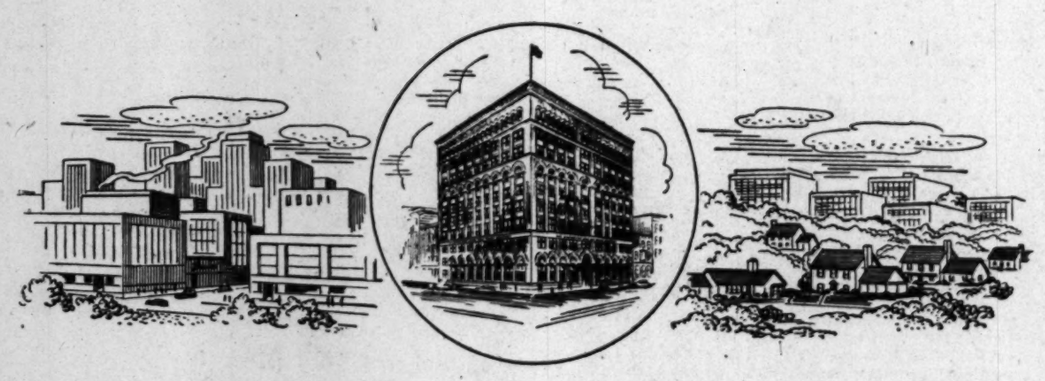
HEALTHY OPTIMISM
RESULTS IN QUICKER
REAL ESTATE LOANS



Impatience is a human trait easy to understand under many circumstances.

A young couple can't wait to get into their new home once they've made their choice.

A business man can't wait to close the deal for the building he just bought—or the apartment house he wants to remodel—or the land he has decided to improve.

It's human nature to act that way . . . and we understand it. But what has all this to do with "healthy optimism"? Plenty!

When you deal with the Real Estate Department of The Washington Loan and Trust Company, you deal with bank executives whose healthy optimism expedites your loan transactions. It cuts down waiting time. It accelerates action. It gives you the "green light" without undue delay.

No matter what type of Real Estate Loan you may be interested in, it is always to your advantage to do business with the Real Estate Department of The Washington Loan and Trust Company.

The Washington Loan and Trust Company makes all types of real estate loans at low rates of interest.

Seattle Case

The unfavorable publicity resulting from rejection of two low British offers to supply the City of Seattle with electrical equipment has been cited by foreign critics as evidence that our practice does not square with our professed desire to encourage the British to earn more dollars by selling us more goods. But ECA officials, who have carried on a vigorous campaign to expand Britain's dollar sales, agree that Seattle did not discriminate against the British firms, since they had failed to comply with certain technical specifications. Hence, there is no ground for official protest.

Although the incident is closed, so far as the ECA is concerned, it highlights the difficulties confronting British exporters when they try to penetrate American markets. Heretofore the high prices charged for British goods have been largely responsible for limited sales. But, aided by devaluation of the pound, the manufacturers who bid for the Seattle contract drastically undercut their American competitors. That at least is encouraging evidence that the handicap of high domestic production costs is not an insurmountable obstacle to increased sales of at least this line of British goods to Americans.

Seattle has told the firms whose offers were rejected that the "door is still open" for other equipment, provided their specifications are in order. It is to be hoped that they will accept this invitation to try again, not only in Seattle but elsewhere. For that is the only way to find out whether the people of this country are willing to support the Administration's recovery program. It cannot succeed unless Americans buy more goods from Great Britain and other ECA countries when they are competitively available.

Fairness To Wallace

Mr. Wallace has now turned the tables twice upon the detractors and smearers of his wartime record. The latest occasion was his answer to the charges that he had a hand in encouraging the export of fissionable materials to the Soviet Union and that he was regarded as so untrustworthy that atomic information was withheld from him. Mr. Wallace insists that all shipments were exclusively controlled by the Lend-Lease Administration. Traffic in fissionable materials, moreover, had to be approved by General Groves' Manhattan Engineering District. This had already been admitted by General Groves, who had thrown down the original story of last December by saying that he had himself approved the single shipment.

This was confirmed last Thursday to the Committee on Un-American Activities by a member of the Lend-Lease Administration. It appears that on April 23, 1943, a uranium shipment was authorized by Maj. Gen. Charles M. Wesson, head of the Lend-Lease office, after consultation with General Groves. Also, the record produced at the Thursday meeting by Mr. Wallace himself shows that he was privy to atomic secrets as a result both of Mr. Roosevelt's desire to keep his second in command informed and of his membership on the top policy committee.

The effort to besmirch Mr. Wallace's wartime service had already boomeranged in the matter of Mr. Wallace's 1944 report on China. Ever since the White Paper on China was issued, statement after statement has appeared alleging grave omissions. One of the omissions was the Wallace report on his mission to China for President Roosevelt—due, no doubt, to the Roosevelt habit of withholding some documents from the State Department. The implication of the critics was that a decision had long ago been taken to ditch Chiang Kai-shek and support the Commies, that it derived from Mr. Wallace, and that you-know-what. Now that the report has somehow turned up, it is revealed as not only a very astute and realistic document, but also as containing the recommendation that "There seems to be no alternative but to support Chiang!"

Well, then, why didn't the State Department publish it before? The answer is given quite frankly in the White Paper. "The files of the department," says the White Paper, "do not contain any indication of the existence of a report in written form made by Mr. Wallace to President Roosevelt or of the nature of any oral report made." However, the Wallace mission was not ignored. The White Paper, in a record that had of necessity to be kept within readable compass, gave 10 pages in 8-point type, or over 10,000 words, to "Summary Notes of Conversations between Vice President Henry A. Wallace and President Chiang Kai-shek." The summary, judging from the Wallace report as now furnished, was eminently fair, though in this matter of fairness reparation needs first to be made to Mr. Wallace.

Choosing The President

The Senate will have an opportunity tomorrow to correct one of the gravest defects in our constitutional system. It has agreed to vote on the resolution sponsored by Senator Lodge and nine other Senators to abolish the electoral college and the unit system of counting electoral votes. Approval of the resolution would be the first major step toward giving the country a reliable system for the election of the President and Vice President. Its rejection would mean continuance of the present obsolete hodgepodge, with its electoral "dummies," its constant threat of nullifying the will of the people, and its grave danger that inauguration day may come with no President elected.

Senator Lodge's outline of the evils of the present system ought to arouse every thoughtful citizen. The basic fact is that we trust the election of the President to 531 "dummies" blindly chosen by the people and trust these "dummies" not to exercise their right of thwarting the popular will. Some States have tried to compel the electors by law to vote for the candidate to whom they are pledged, but these laws are of doubtful validity, because the Constitution, as originally adopted, was intended to entrust the choice of the President and Vice President to the discretion of the electors. We have got away from that practice only by usage, and the fact that it remains the letter of the Constitution ought to be of concern to everyone who believes in popular government.

The second grave weakness in the present system is the ever-present possibility that a tie in the electoral votes may throw the election into the House of Representatives and the House itself may be deadlocked. On a notorious occasion when the House did choose a President, it took not Jackson, the choice of the people, but John Quincy Adams, because of his alleged deal with Henry Clay. This supposed safety valve in our electoral system has never been satisfactory, and it is probably less so today than ever before.

Even more serious is the unit system of counting electoral votes. In 1948, for example, Governor Dewey had a small plurality in popular votes over President Truman in Connecticut, and all of that State's eight electoral votes were counted for Mr. Dewey. On the contrary, 13,300,000 voters cast their ballots for Mr. Dewey in 32 States, and not one of those votes was counted for him in the electoral college. This is an absurdly undemocratic method of counting votes which has honeycombed our political system with inconsistencies and ill consequences. It makes possible the election of a candidate who has fewer popular votes than his rival. It has the effect of concentrating political campaign efforts in the large doubtful States. It virtually deprives the so-called "sure States" of any participation in the presidential campaigns. Since everyone knows that Georgia will go Democratic and Vermont Republican, the people of those States become mere bystanders who see little point in even going to the polls. By the same token undue influence is given to minority groups in the large States who may be able to swing all the electoral votes of those States to one candidate or the other. Party responsibility on a national scale is thus discouraged. Especially the solid South finds itself taken for granted and is able to pull little weight in the councils of the party to which it adheres.

The correction of these evils seems to us an urgent task. The chief question that arises is whether the present electoral system shall be reformed or completely replaced by election of the President and Vice President by direct vote of the people. Senator Langer has proposed a constitutional amendment for this purpose. It seems to us unwise for two reasons. Direct election of the President would be another step away from federalism, which is the genius of the American system. It is impracticable anyway, as the smaller States will never consent to give up the relative advantage they obtain from the division of electoral votes on the basis of each State's total number of Senators and Representatives.

By eliminating "dummy" electors, and dividing each State's electoral votes among the candidates for President in the same proportion as the popular vote is divided, the Lodge resolution would accomplish probably nine tenths of the advantages of the Langer proposal while avoiding the disadvantages. It seems to us a practical and necessary reform. If the Senate conscientiously analyzes the dangers in the present system and the careful remedy that has been devised, the favorable vote is likely to be far in excess of the necessary two-thirds majority.

Country Church

Those who attended an old-time country church will sigh wistfully over the reported decline of that institution. They will envision it standing remote and lonely, a grayish white frame structure surrounded by cedars, locusts or maples, and if very old, having a burying ground in the rear. Or they may see it surging with life on a radiant Sunday morning as parishioners arrive in buggies, carriages, a few prosperous deacons in open-topped high-riding automobiles. They will hear the haunting strains of gospel hymns, the sonorous—and often soporific—tones of the preacher; see the members of the congregation in their Sunday finery; and in a flash relive the dramas of their lives. They will think of the community social life that centered at the church, the ice cream, oyster and box suppers, the seeing home of girls after Sunday night services.

But now one fourth of rural churches do not hold services every Sunday, and one tenth are shut down because ministers are lacking. Hence Dr. Mark Rich, secretary of the Town and Country Department of the American Baptist Missionary Society, is urging laymen to qualify themselves for preaching. The need for this is greatest in remote areas. In more populous regions the motor car takes people to church in town and village. It also takes them to movies, drug stores, night clubs. But anyone who knew the social loneliness of rural life before motor cars and radios became common will always feel an obligation to the country church. Likely as not it was where he got his life partner.

Money For Alaska

Alaska's Governor Gruening has again pricked the conscience of Congress respecting the defense of this northern Territory. Under present conditions, he has warned a House Appropriations Subcommittee, the Territory could be captured by one or two Russian parachute divisions. He contrasts the 96 million dollars voted for Alaska last year with the billions expended to strengthen Europe against communism.

Obviously it is infeasible to station enough men in Alaska to defend every hamlet in that vast region. The important areas to defend are the strategically placed airfields and naval bases. These would be prime Russian targets, and they would be stepping stones in an attack on continental United States. The fundamental limiting factor on troops to defend these bases is housing. Not only are the quarters for troops at the bases themselves bad, but the little off-base housing that is available for dependents is in wretched condition and exorbitantly priced.

Congress, however, has not been so insensitive to this defect as Governor Gruening implies. Although it cut the last request from 137 to 96 million dollars, this allows a start on desperately needed housing. Military men say that, considering other commitments, this sum is about all that can conscientiously be spent right now on housing in Alaska. Where Congress has been negligent is in failing to provide any money to start the radar warning screen. The Air Force has had to borrow from other funds in order to get under way on this vital defense aid.

Governor Gruening's warning is not so much a club to beat Congress with for past failures as it is a reminder that present programs must be continued and expanded. What Governor Gruening is arguing for basically is recognition of Alaska's essential place in the defense picture. Parenthetically, there could be no better sign of this recognition than congressional action on the statehood bill which would strengthen Alaska economically and politically as a counterpart of military measures. The fundamental fact is that in the air age the United States has no fixed frontiers, and Alaska has assumed a new and totally different significance. It has a good deal more significance, for example, than the small Chinese island over which the Formosa Firsters are wasting so much wind.

Caribbean Conflict

The five-nation fact-finding committee of the Organization of American States has a big job in cutting away the confusion surrounding the dispute between Haiti and the Dominican Republic. Wisely the committee is making an on-the-spot investigation. We hope it will resist the lures of wining and dining to get at the real facts of the conflict, even if the presentation is sometimes inept.

This newspaper erred the other day in stating that the Dominicans had not invoked the Rio defense treaty. We were misinformed; they did invoke it shortly after Haiti had herself cited it in connection with an alleged Dominican plot to overthrow her government—though Dominican President Trujillo in effect already had flouted the treaty in asking for war powers against nations suspected of harboring plotters against the Dominican Republic. Whether the Dominican complaint, which threw in virtually everything but the kitchen sink in accusations against Haiti and Cuba, was merely a smokescreen to cover the Haitian charge is one thing the committee must determine. There seems to be a good deal of documentary evidence to back up the Haitian complaint. It also is significant that American Ambassadors, in the recent meeting in Havana, found little substantiation for Trujillo's cry that an invasion against the Dominican Republic is being readied in Cuba.

The test of the OAS committee's effectiveness will be whether it can come forward with concrete findings rather than platitudes. Maintenance of peace in the Caribbean depends in the last analysis, of course, on the willingness of governments to respect each other's integrity regardless of ideological differences. There has been a good deal of dissatisfaction, however, with the pussyfooting of the Inter-American Peace Committee, a separate harmonizing body. The OAS committee cannot as presently constituted enforce its recommendations. But it has a strong weapon in publicity if it will avoid diplomatic niceties in calling a spade a spade.

HORIZON

The empty road companioned field on field;
The moon
Leaped from the hills of dusk to plains of sky.
Far across the reedy marsh a loon
Breathed his sharp evening sigh.
And out upon this wide grey disk,
Under the rounding lid,
I said I would ride the narrowing road
Out to the end. I did.
But the lid swung down before me then,
And I traveled the same road back again.

Traveling Pillboxes

The boys who run the chamber of horrors division of Washington's streetcars and buses are really ingenious. On my way to lunch the other day a boxcar-type placard in a Pennsylvania ave. streetcar confronted me with this arresting idea: "You Can Have Syphilis and Not Know It. If In Doubt Go to Your Doctor or a Clinic." In smaller type it gave the name of a "Health Center."

Also, the ads included the usual pictures of handsome undertakers and a lovely coffin, with specific instructions what to do in case of death. Other placards in the car warned of heart disease, of diabetes, and of tuberculosis. The beneficent transit company, ever solicitous of my welfare, likewise had me hooked up to a radio, with, Oh! the sweetest voice drooling a rhapsody about some new magic pills to stop colds.

Fearing that if I rode that trumbril much longer I would apply for a transfer to the black maria and the morgue, I staggered out, pretty weak but nevertheless glad and grateful that Capital Transit, out of its benevolence, had not put the finger of incipient leprosy upon me. SALUD.

School Concerts

Some of the children in our class went to a concert given by the National Symphony Orchestra, and we would like the public to know we enjoyed it.

The man that conducted was Howard Mitchell and Paul Hume narrated a story.

Every Friday they have a concert and broadcast it. It helps us understand more about the concert if we have program notes. Paul Gable and Alfred Johnson who are the heads of the music department in the Washington schools, make it possible. Every time there is a concert they send us program notes.

Auto Repair Abuse

My car was in need of carburetor overhauling and repair and I was aware of this when I took the car in to a garage. They were unable to attend to it immediately but said they would call later and give me an estimate. Later that evening they did call, gave me an estimate on the repair of the carburetor and I authorized them to proceed with the job.

When I went to get the car I was told that, after they had taken off the carburetor and examined it, they found that they did not have the necessary repair parts and could do nothing to repair it. They therefore put the carburetor back, leaving the car in exactly the same condition it was when I left it with them, but insisted upon charging me $3.80 for the (unnecessary) labor put in.

It appears to me that it is an unethical business practice for a repair firm to undertake repairs which they cannot complete and then demand payment from a customer when they have actually done nothing to warrant any payment.

"15-Cent Fares"

Your editorial of January 14 supporting a raise for the Capital Transit Co. in my estimation takes a very unfair position.

You would give the public to believe that Capital Transit is operating in the red. The majority of the public is aware that this is totally untrue, for the transit company has paid a substantial dividend every year since it merged with the old Washington Railway and Electric Co. The Wolfson group virtually jumped at the opportunity to get into the company, and one of their group even remarked that the transit company was a depression-proof investment.

The burden upon the public is already more than they can stand, and certainly more than is fair. If the transit company is losing money as it claims (but is not actually) it would have to be as a result of mismanagement. The company should be turned over to the city and operated on a non-profit basis.

"Bonus Clamor"

I believe that the average serviceman and veteran who served during World War II agrees with your January 23 editorial, "Bonus Clamor," regarding a general bonus. However, I do believe that a grave injustice is done by several States who have denied the veteran a State bonus. The boy from Texas, Georgia or any other State that did not grant a bonus fought just as hard as the boy from New York and Ohio. If the individual States don't realize the unfairness in this problem, it is up to Congress to equalize the veterans' rights.

Acheson And The Hiss Verdict

By some curious and inverted process of reasoning which I am unable to follow, The Washington Post reaches the conclusion (in its editorial of January 27, "Conflict of Loyalties") that, while Mr. Hiss' enemies, including some of his former associates in high places, are free to make the air blue with their denunciations — indulging lightheartedly in that most popular sport of kicking a man when he is down—his friends and supporters should turn tail and run for cover.

I did not know that it was my duty as a loyal American to agree with every decision made in the courts of the land. I seem to remember a long history of cases —this was, of course, back in the days when the possession of individual conscience and the duty to act upon it were taken for granted—where men and women disagreed with verdicts and gave freely of their time and money to combat them.

ANN NELSON.
Washington.

Since the natural thing is to accept the verdict, it places Hiss beyond the pale of trust in affairs involving our security. Persons who persist in championing Hiss must necessarily flout the trial verdict. Is it not logical to assume they should also disconnect themselves from our public affairs?

Secretary of State Acheson has frankly stated his continued faith in Hiss. As a corollary, Mr. Acheson should retire from the public service. If he hasn't the sense of propriety to do so voluntarily, then those responsible for his appointment should end that connection.

F. A. GARRETT.
Mineral Wells, Tex.

Did Marquis Childs intend to imply in his column of January 24 that he still doubts whether Alger Hiss committed the crime of which he has been convicted and that, even if he did, Mr. Childs doesn't consider it a very criminal thing to have done? Does Mr. Childs further believe that it would have been better for the Nation if the whole affair had never been uncovered at all? CALVIN B. HOOVER.
Dean, Graduate School, Duke University.
Durham, N. C.

Perhaps no question arises as to the honesty of the jury who, on the evidence presented, judged Mr. Hiss guilty, but everyone still has the right and the privilege of questioning the honesty of that evidence and the honesty of the witnesses who were responsible for it. Hundreds of juries have been honestly deceived and have pronounced verdicts which have afterward been found to be grieviously mistaken. Innocent men have many times been put to death for crimes which they did not commit, and, I am sure, that hundreds of men and women all over this broad land still believe that Mr. Hiss is innocent and that he is the unfortunate victim of falsehood and duplicity.

EDMUND STEVENS.

Dreyfuss would have died in jail if the French had adopted The Washington Post's attitude in the Hiss case.

I do not know either Alger Hiss or his wife and so far as I know have never met a Communist. However, I definitely do not feel that Mr. Hiss received a fair trial and when I contemplate the gloatings and hurrahing of Congressmen over his conviction, I feel a little sick.

Congress has set a statute of limitations for most crimes, believing that a man accused long after the event would find it too difficult to prove his innocence. I believe the three-year limit is too short for most offenses but any likely to be imposed (5, 7, or 10) would still not permit the trial of Alger Hiss. To say he was sentenced for perjury is sheer nonsense. He was tried (and all the evidence covered) the offense which our laws say he could not be tried for. Obviously, no man can remember precise details 12 to 14 years old, yet one person swore Hiss' wallpaper was mulberry at a particular ancient date; others swore it was not. I don't know the color of my own living room that far back. MARY PLUM.
Washington.

It is not Mr. Acheson's courageous statement concerning his attitude toward Alger Hiss, but rather it is the failure, so far, of the Department of Justice, itself, to announce a date for the trial of Whittaker Chambers, which casts doubt on the democratic process of justice. Mr. Chambers, a "former" Communist, a confessed perjurer, traitor and spy has gone scot free, to date, merely because the Justice Department has failed to act.

NANCY PORTER STRAUS.
Washington.

I must differ with your appraisal of Secretary Acheson's defense of Hiss. By his action he has contributed to the dispelment of hysteria and the assurance that a fair atmosphere will prevail in the appeal or retrial of Hiss.

Acheson has demonstrated courage and decency.

Barriers On British Goods

By Marquis Childs

Practice And Preaching

AN EVENT almost ignored here in this country has caused a tremendous stir in Europe. That is the failure of two British firms with the low bids to get the contract for the transformers being ordered by the City of Seattle.

The award, for $751,000, was given to the General Electric Co. One lower bid came from an American company for $720,000. Two lower bids, one for $572,000 and one for $515,000, came from British companies. The British bidders would have had to absorb the 15 percent duty when the transformers were delivered.

It is not hard to see why this has stirred a wave of skepticism in Europe over America's intentions. Paul Hoffman, the dynamic head of the European Cooperation Administration, has been preaching the necessity for Britain and the rest of Europe to concentrate on sending imports to this country.

So two British firms make an all-out effort. They make detailed bids as called for by the municipality of Seattle. They cut costs to the bone.

And what happens? An American firm that was not even the low bidder got the contract. ECA had a representative look into this and the representative reported back informally—and somewhat vaguely—that the city was justified in accepting the bid approved.

ECA has, of course, no authority in the matter. There is nothing that Hoffman and his allies and adherents can do except preach. Under the "Buy America" law, no Federal contract can be awarded if a single penny is to go to a foreign firm.

THIS LAST has, incidentally, been a source of considerable unhappiness to the Canadians. They had pointed out that it would greatly relieve their dollar shortage if the United States would buy even a small fraction of the arms for the military aid program in Canada. But with the firm insistence of American suppliers that the United States can produce everything needed, the answer was no.

Europeans are asking: Is Seattle an example of free enterprise? Is this what competition means? Or is it, instead, the kind of cartel control that Americans rebuke us in Europe for practicing?

The answers ECA has been able to make are rather lame. This comes at an extremely embarrassing moment, for Hoffman has gone to Paris to talk hard economic facts with the Europeans in ECA.

It hits hardest in Britain, where a critical election campaign is on. For at least two reasons, the British press has not played up the Seattle business.

One obvious reason is that it would tend to give aid and comfort to the British Labor Party, and the press is predominantly Conservative. The Laborites could jeer at such an example of competitive free enterprise. They could ask, with perhaps some embarrassment to their opposition, whether this was the model the Conservatives proposed to follow.

To play up the news would be to encourage the British businessman who has all along said that the United States would not in the final showdown accept European imports. He would say, "I told you so." And with what seemed to be justification for his position, he would go on following the easy path of sending his exports to areas where the big British debt makes it possible to unload almost anything.

THERE IS in this an object lesson than can hardly be ignored. If Europe cannot earn dollars by way of exports sent into the United States, it would seem to be impossible ever to correct the unbalance now being made up by direct American aid.

Criticism in this country has been repeatedly directed at the British for trade agreements, such as that with Argentina, on a bilateral basis. These agreements have been bitterly resented by American businessmen. But if we are not willing to practice what we preach and permit the competition of foreign imports in at least a limited fashion, then our position is pretty weak.

Congress seems unlikely at this session to approve the International Trade Organization, the terms of which were shaped by American negotiators at lengthy conferences in Europe and in Cuba. That failure, too, will be taken as a sign in Europe that we do not intend to be bound by our preachments.

Out in Seattle a taxpayers' committee has been formed to find out why the municipality did not take the low bid. It is a healthy sign. But there is a considerably larger subject for inquiry—and that is whether the United States will ever begin to behave as the world's largest creditor must behave if there is to be anything resembling a free exchange of goods. That means taking in a sizable share of imports.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Mao And Titoism

ON THE future of communism in China there seems to be nothing in the official writings and pronouncements which can be regarded as the blueprint of a plan. Careful students of Communist literature whom I have consulted can produce texts which show that beginning with Lenin nearly 30 years ago, the Communist leaders have been deeply interested and active in promoting the revolution in Asia and in making Communists the leaders of that revolution.

Lippmann

But these texts throw no light whatever on what is to happen, as in China now, when the revolution is victorious under the leadership of convinced Communists like Mao-Tse-tung. The question of how a Communist government will proceed to transform China, which is certainly not now a Communist society, is of enormous consequence for China, and indeed for all of Asia. But there is, it is reasonably certain, no explicit answer to that question now available.

WHAT WE know, however, is the story of how the Russian Communists transformed Russia. Is this to be the model and pattern for China? It seems most improbable that it can be. It is unlikely, I should imagine, that Mao-Tse-tung thinks that the Russian model can be imitated in China during his lifetime.

The Russian model for transforming a backward society was described by Stalin himself in February, 1946, in an address, which on this subject, is the classic Communist text. Stalin was explaining how Russia had been transformed from "an agrarian into an industrial country" in "only some 13 years." This could not have been done, he said, without the collectivization of agriculture, without changing "from a small scale peasant economy to a large scale agricultural economy." This had to be done, he said, in order "to eliminate the age old backwardness of our agriculture in so short a period of time."

And then Stalin added: "It cannot be said that the party's policy did not meet with resistance in this respect. Not only backward people, who always resist everything new, but also many others of the party systematically held back the party and tried in all sorts of ways to drag it on to the usual capitalist line of development."

THIS resistance was crushed and overcome in Russia by the power of the Soviet state. Without that Russia could not have been transformed rapidly into a Communist society.

That defines rather sharply and clearly the problem which confronts Mao-Tse-tung. There is no doubt that his popular support rests on the peasants who, on his urging and with his help, have expropriated the landlords and driven out the money lenders. That is the Chinese revolution as of today. But we know on the authority of Stalin himself that this is not the Communist revolution. If Russia is the prototype, then the real Communist revolution lies ahead of Mao-Tse-tung, and it will turn upon whether he can and will use the power of the state to force the peasants, who have seized the land from the landlords, to enter into collective farms under Communist government control.

UNLESS Mao does that, the evolution of China will be radically different from the evolution of Russia. For China is overwhelmingly a rural society. And if that society is composed of peasants on small holdings, not of collective farms dominated by the Communist state, then China will not be a Communist society whatever the personal doctrine of its leaders.

The question then is whether Mao can do to Chinese agriculture what Stalin did to Russian. The answer depends on whether the Chinese Central Government has, or is likely to acquire, the overwhelming political power which the Soviet state did acquire. We cannot know. But we have good reasons, not wishful reasons, for thinking that the organization of an all-powerful state in China will be ever so much more difficult than it was in Russia. For one thing, Czarist Russia was a powerful state before the Communists captured that state. China has not been a powerful state for centuries, and even the rudiments of the communications and the administrative machinery of a strong central government do not exist in China.

YET THE real Communist revolution in a backward rural society requires a well-nigh omnipotent central government. If that does not exist, if the central government does not feel itself strong enough to impose communism on the great mass of peasants, the result is—not Stalinist communism but—Titoism.

For Titoism is in its essence the refusal or incapacity of Communists when they achieve power to impose communism on the peasantry. In that sense, and it is a most important sense as Stalin and the Cominform have made it very clear, Titoism is the greatest disappointment and setback which communism has suffered since first it triumphed in Russia. For Titoism shows that revolutions led by Communists in backward countries do not tend to develop on the Russian model. It is not improbable therefore that just as Russia did not develop on the Marxist model, so China will not develop on the Lenin-Stalin model. It will develop in some other way — very probably in a way that not even Mao himself can now foresee.

NATURALLY we cannot foresee it either, and if the reader feels that all this is speculative and leads to no clear and practical conclusion on which we can act immediately, I can say only that he is quite right. But it cannot be a bad thing to begin to try to understand an historic development which, as a matter of fact, we shall not be able to understand fully for a very long time to come.

Lifting the burden of fear

How often one encounters fear — if not for "himself," his own health and welfare, then fear concerning those he loves.

Does it have to be endured? Or is there a way to be free from this torment that is so common?

A mighty and increasing multitude can answer "We have found the way!" Men and women in all walks of life, in heartfelt thankfulness testify that Christian Science is steadily and progressively showing them how to replace fear with confidence and assurance unshakable.

The thoughtful study of

Legion Opposes Draft Law, Urges Universal Training

By The Associated Press

The American Legion urged Congress yesterday to enact universal military training instead of continuing the peacetime draft law.

Miles D. Kennedy, director of the Legion's national legislative commission, said the big veterans' organization has supported the draft "as a temporary expedient" in the past but that it feels its value as a deterrent to aggressors has passed.

"The potential strength of the American Nation can best be organized through national security training, and now is the time for enactment of this program," Kennedy said.

Would Be Permanent

U.M.T. would be a permanent system for training young people to prepare them for defending the country in case of war. The setup would be separate from the armed services and all young men would be subject to the training. Under the draft law, as it has operated in the past, a portion of the Nation's youth is selected for service with the armed forces.

In the past, Congress has turned a deaf ear to President Truman's requests for U.M.T. Apparently reasoning it would do so again, Mr. Truman did not ask funds to run such a program in the budget he submitted to Congress early this month.

The Legion spokesman was one of a number of draft opponents who testified before the House Armed Services Committee. It is considering the Administration's request for a three-year extension of the selective service law, due to expire in June.

Support for such an extension came from Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh, president of the National Guard Association of the United States. He said the act should be continued because it would save valuable time in the event it becomes necessary to mobilize in the future.

No Inductions Recently

No men have been inducted under the present law for some months. Walsh said his group would not object to a ban against future inductions unless Congress grants specific permission.

Miss Elizabeth Smart of Evanston, Ill., speaking for the Women's Christian Temperance Union, said the draft law is an unnecessary reflection on the nation's youth.

"Since American youth has responded by voluntary enlistment even beyond the Army's capacity to receive them, why should they longer be stigmatized with the draft, implying that only by compulsion can they be brought to volunteer for the defense of their country?" she said.

Other major organizations which opposed an extension included the American Federation of Labor and the National Grange. Support for an extension came from the Jewish War Veterans.

shelter, health, education, welfare and recreation."

Air Force Secretary W. Stuart Symington reported that progress had been made last year in planning the air defense of the United States, but that "most of this progress was just that—planning."

Symington repeated his recommendation that "from a purely military standpoint" a 70-group Air Force instead of the present 48-group strength is "necessary for the minimum peacetime security of the United States." He specified, however, that the Air Force supports the Administration 48-group plan on economy grounds.

Secretary Johnson, discussing unification, said he did not "discount the damage done" by inter-service controversy," but felt the latter had been exaggerated. He indorsed "honest differences of viewpoint" but declared that where he has made a decision after a 2-to-1 recommendation of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, it should be carried out "ungrudgingly."

The combined report of the defense chiefs also disclosed that the mysterious Sandia base in New Mexico is a center of the "Armed Forces Special Weapons Project" engaged in assembling A-bombs and teaching bomber crews and others how to use them.

Army Secretary Gordon Gray and Navy Secretary Francis Matthews gave an indication of our planning for Arctic defense. Gray said Alaskan troops numbered only 6500 last July. (There are now about 8000.) Matthews mentioned a new "LSD"—landing ship, dock—capable of launching "substantial numbers of amphibious craft in subfreezing areas."

Matthews also declared that while the aircraft carrier United States was canceled, "development studies" for the craft solved many problems in carrier construction.

H-Bomb 'Hush' Part of Plan, But Issue Hits Street Now

weeks more of the necessary facts will be disclosed. It seems clear that the Nation will not tolerate permanent suppression of the pertinent information.

Meanwhile, however, some deductions, or some beginnings to consideration of the problem, can be made from what is known or strongly believed to be true.

The purpose of this series is to set out as many of the facts and the initial debates about them as possible.

First, a simplified word on what the H-bomb is.

The atom bombs of Hiroshima and Nagasaki derive their stupendous force from conversion of matter to energy. The atoms of uranium or plutonium, among the heaviest of elements, are caused to split into other lighter elements. In this process of fission, a little weight is lost, or rather converted into enormous quantities of energy.

This energy, which comes from the nucleus or core of the atom, is of an order of magnitude thousands of times greater than that released in chemical reactions such as the explosion of gunpowder or TNT.

Energy from Fusion Process

Energy of like or even greater magnitude can come from the very lightest elements when they are made to enter into a fusion, not fission, process. Again, a little mass changes to gigantic energy.

If some atoms of hydrogen, either alone or with lithium, were fused they would recombine to form helium, accompanied by this enormous release of energy. If, gram for gram, the energy from hydrogen fusion is no greater than that of uranium or plutonium fission, it must be remembered that hydrogen and lithium can be procured by the ton, not in the fabulously costly and relatively tiny amounts of the explosive heavier elements.

In this way, as a famous Austrian scientist wrote as early as 1946, "the total energy available in nuclear explosives could be increased several thousand times compared to that which could be stored in the form of plutonium or uranium-235 alone.

"God protect the country on which the 6-ton bomb of lithium-hydride will ever be brought to explode!"

The hydrogen fusion process is essentially what happens in the sun, though the mechanics involve a long and complex cycle of transmutation of hydrogen into several elements on the way to becoming helium. But this, basically, is the energy of the sun.

Known Since 1938

The theory of that reaction in the sun was known with varying degrees of certainty here and in Europe since 1938 and was one of the liveliest of all topics of scientific discussion.

The possibility of duplicating it on earth was thought about almost as soon as the experiments were made that led to the fission of uranium and that culminated in the realization, in early 1939, that a uranium chain reaction—and therefore a uranius bomb—was theoretically possible.

At first, the fusion of hydrogen was considered impossible on earth, because it was demonstrable that it could not occur without temperatures unheard of, and not to be conceived or anticipated, on earth.

But with the explosion of the atomic bomb, it was realized that for the first time in history, temperatures of the necessary magnitude were actually produced on earth. They would exist in and at the exploding surface of an atomic bomb.

Thus, by the end of the war, scientists saw before them the possibility—not proved; only theoretical—of a hydrogen bomb. The fusion, it appeared, could take place if one used the explosion of a uranium or plutonium bomb as a trigger, or detonation cap.

It further appeared that there would be no theoretical upper limit to the size of the bomb and the consequent explosion. In a crude manner of speaking, it can be said that you can put as much hydrogen into the mixture as you want. You can order it, so to say, by the carload lot.

And finally, it was clear that such an explosion or nuclear reaction would have no conceivable peacetime benefits. The temperature would be so enormous that it could not be directed or channeled for any purpose except sheer devastation.

But what devastation To the A-bomb's six or eight square miles of destruction, the H-bomb would destroy an area of 20, or 50, or 100 square miles.

For undisclosed reasons, the American policy after the war was not to press the project to make an H-bomb. Apparently it was considered. But, according to Harold C. Urey, distinguished atomic scientist who helped develop the A-bomb, it was rejected for a "curious prejudice" that he said he understood but could not disclose.

Whatever the system was by which the H-bomb would be made, its theory at least was evident to persons who had not themselves participated in making the A-bomb.

Theory Stated in '46

This is proved by the fact that in 1946 there appeared in Vienna a book by physicist Hans Thirring (quoted above), which is now acknowledged by United States scientists to contain a clear and presumably accurate statement of the theory.

If Thirring could work it out, so could, and have, scientists of every nation.

This is merely to say that the Russians know the theory, and that they must have known the possibilities when we succeeded in exploding an A-bomb over Hiroshima—if, indeed, they did not know it before. Any other conclusion is wishful non-thinking of a criminal sort.

The realization, last September 23, that the U. S. S. R. had matched us in making an A-bomb —almost surely a plutonium bomb —instantly brought new life into the dormant question: Must we now go the Russians one better (or maybe catch up with them) by trying to make an H-bomb?

Our scientists, it is known, believe that there are better than even chances of success in making an H-bomb. The chances are better, in fact, than those in 1941 of making a successful A-bomb.

The estimates of how long it would take to do it are hard to come by. Best guess is that it is a matter of two to five years.

False Faith in New Weapon Warned Against by Lilienthal

H-bomb issue, and called it by its name.

After the session with Oppenheimer, McMahon admitted the obvious—that his group had been studying the question of the hydrogen bomb, had visited atomic installations to learn about it, and had been discussing it, hot and heavy, with the AEC, the top scientists, the Department of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

He added:

'The committee met and discussed the matter of atomic weapons, including the subject of the so-called hydrogen bomb. The committee took no votes or action but will meet tomorrow afternoon for further deliberations.

"I have transmitted to the President certain of my personal views on the bearing that these questions have not only on the national security but also on world peace which all our efforts are designed to promote.

"When I feel that the best interests of security and peace will be served, I will not hesitate to make my views known."

Lilienthal's views on the H-bomb issue emerged from a question and answer session largely devoted to his refusing to step over the line into disclosure of classified information.

Can't State Real Issue

Thus, he said the issue was not and could not be the simple one, unrelated to other considerations, of whether to make the bomb or not or of sheer opposition to the hydrogen weapon as such. But, he said, he could not state the real issue, or get close to it.

Nor could other people who knew it discuss it, for they, too, would then be making unauthorized disclosures.

That implied, a reporter said, that the public could never get into a debate that was of vital concern to them, and that a decision would be made in the absence of the usual democratic processes.

Lilienthal said he did not mean to imply that.

The reporter rephrased the question, and asked when the public could exercise its judgment on the momentous issue.

"Gosh, I don't know," said Lilienthal.

Some of His Comments

Here are some of his comments in answer to questions on his views:

"The question in respect to the production of any particular weapon is almost never that question alone. The question of alternatives or balancing that effort with something else, or the effect of that balancing, enter into it . . .

"What I am saying is that if the question were just the naked question of opposition to the development of a weapon, I have not been opposed to it, if that were the only question . . . But other issues are involved."

A reporter said, "You have indicated that there might also be a question of balancing that effort against something else . . . Can you tell us what you mean by that?"

Lilienthal replied, "Whether the effort, the money, the time, the scientific effort and so on, in one direction, could produce better effects for the security of the country if applied in a different direction . . .

"If something costs 10 billion dollars as a weapon, and 10 billion dollars will do more for the security of the United States in some other way, then you would be opposed to the weapon because that is not the best way to promote the country's interest.

"But that doesn't mean you are opposed to the weapon as such. You are opposed to the weapon in a set of circumstances in which the issue is presented. . . ."

He pointed out that the AEC had built bombs when it was clear that constituted the best expenditure of effort. He added:

"If someone came along and said there was a better was to spend money and effort on a super-super-carrier or something, weapons or non-weapons, then I am sure we would have considered that and probably another course would have been followed."

The 'ANTA Album' Wrecks Rafters

By Richard L. Coe

THE THIRD ANNUAL edition of the one-performance-only "ANTA Album" in New York Sunday night had, as usual, as many highlights as it had acts.

While benefits and all-star nights come and go with the years, this event has become the most impressive on any generation's theatrical calendar. The difficulties of gathering together the stars and choruses are well-nigh insuperable, but the evening is always a credit to the American theater.

Miss Ethel Barrymore's reappearance after five Hollywood years in Barrie's one-act play, "The Twelve Pound Look," was, of course, the sign for a mighty ovation from the chockful Ziegfeld Theater. And the institution of a line of principals for the finale introduced as impressive an array as ever bowed together from one stage.

But let's go through the program in order:

Yvonne Adair, Dorothy of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," led the chorsuses of six current musicals in "Another Op'nin', Another Show" from "Kiss Me Kate," during which each chorus did a highlight of its own show.

Will Mahoney did his xylophone taps, to stop the show before it even got started, the same finale he'd used here at the Capitol a few weeks ago.

Fritzi Scheff, 45 years later, sang "Kiss Me Again" just the way she had the night "Mlle. Modiste" opened. Fritzi, 71, looked sensational — orange hair, green dress, spangles; the voice thinnish, but projected with great style and vast effect.

Phil Loeb, Lionel Stander, Murray Hamilton and Alexander Asio did their eating scene from "Room Service."

Nancy Walker and Cris Alexander revived their taxicab scene from "On the Town."

Ruth Gordon and Raymond Massey did a scene from "Ethan Frome," prompting one New York producer to rush backstage and offer to revive it for them and Pauline Lord, who was to have been with them, but has been ailing.

Burl Ives sang two of his guitar numbers, giving Forrest Tucker a swell idea for a television show, which he has confided to Burl.

Francine Larrimore revived her Kitty of 1929's "Let Us Be Gay," the girl with the sad, brittle voice.

R. H. Burnside, who helped stage "Floradora" back in 1900, directed the famed Sextet, accenting the facile charm of the thing, with Ethel Barrymore Colt (daughter of the Queen), Allyn McLerie, Candace Montgomery, Kate Mur-Jack Whiting, John Sheehan and Maurice Kelly, among their partah, Jane Judge and Mardi Bayne; ners.

Miss Barrymore

Queen Ethel closed the first act in her famed vaudeville playlet and brought down what was left of the rafters. They did this in modern dress, a white-topped Ethel, making no effort to look less than her 70 years, but achieving it by a full generation. She played her first scene back to the audience, tossed off those Barrie observations in that husky voice and was altogether captivating.

Act II opened with the Hall Johnson Choir in music from "The Green Pastures."

Brenda Forbes did that wittily delicate sketch about the young Parisian ballet lady who wishes something would happen to her; everything happens to other people, she observes, "And Why Not I?" Then a voice calls to her and as she resumes her pose, "Yes, Mr. Degas."

"Winterset" Prompts Revival

Burgess Meredith and Margo gave the finest emotional acting of the evening, both stars displaying a force and power for the "Winterset" finale that got 1680 people totally silent. Maxwell Anderson's great verses poured out superbly. Producer Vinton Freedly scurried backstage, offered to revive the play for the two stars.

Another Ethel took over for the second most personal ovation of the evening, Miss Waters, who sang "Cabin In the Sky" and "Takin' a Chance On Love." What an ovation for this extraordinary woman, now starring again at the Empire in "Member of the Wedding!"

From "The Little Show" (1929) came that grand George S. Kaufman sketch, "The Still Alarm," about the unperturbable Britons whose hotel is on fire, the loquacious fireman and his client, violin-playing pal, Arthur Margetson, Tom Helmore, Myron McCormick, Bert Lahr and Jack Benny did this one. Of course, Jack played "Love in Bloom."

Shavian Trick

Bobby Clark and six of the blondes from "Gentlemen" did "Robert the Roue from Reading, Pa.," one of Bobby's greatest.

Shaw's "The Dark Lady of the Sonnets," a witty appeal for a national theater, was superbly acted by Rex Harrison, Peggy Wood, Lilli Palmer and Francis L. Sullivan, under Cedric Hardwicke's direction. More on this later sometime.

Moss Hart and Clarence Derwent were the masters of ceremonies, their styles contrasting nicely. At the finale, with the choruses singing "There's No Business Like Show Business," led by Celeste Holm, Mr. Derwent presented Miss Barrymore with a scroll of appreciation. Out front were as many stars as on stage.

Need I repeat—it was a frabjous evening?

Broderick Crawford and Olivia de Havilland, top choices for best-acting honors for 1949

'King's Men' Wins AP Poll As the Best Movie of 1949

Hollywood, Jan. 30 (AP).—"All the King's Men" wins an Associated Press poll of 80 top Hollywood correspondents on the question, "What do you think was the best movie of 1949?"

The picture received 26½ votes. (A few correspondents split their votes between two pictures.) Next came "Twelve O'Clock High," with 7½, and "The Heiress," with 7.

Preponderant choices for best-acting honors in the poll are:

Starring actor: Broderick Crawford in "All the King's Men," 34 votes. He was followed by Richard Todd in "The Hasty Heart," 12, and Kirk Douglas in "Champion," 11.

Starring actress: Olivia de Havilland in "The Heiress," 40 votes. Next were Susan Hayward in "My Foolish Heart," 12, and Deborah Kerr in "Edward, My Son," 11.

Supporting actor: Dean Jagger in "Twelve O'Clock High," 26 votes. Closest competition was from Ralph Richardson in "The Heiress," 13 votes, and James Whitmore in "Battleground," 10. Richardson also received five starring-actor votes.

Supporting actress: Mercedes McCambridge in "All the King's Men," 49 votes. Following her were Ethel Waters in "Pinky," 6, and Judy Holliday in "Adam's Rib," 3.

The poll, the first of its kind ever made here, may be a forecast of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science awards March 23.

Eight of the 80 correspondents said they didn't see enough pictures last year to form opinions.

Best-picture tallies included "Champion," 6; "A Letter to Three Wives," 4; "Sands of Iwo Jima," 3½; "Home of the Brave," 3; "Lost Boundaries," 3; "The Hasty Heart," 2½; "Battleground," 2; "Come to the Stable," 1½. One each went to "Quartet," "The Blue Lagoon," "The Bicycle Thief," and "Red Shoes." "The Window" got ½ vote.

New Health Bill To Lie on Shelf, Murray Declares

By The Associated Press

A brand-new bill on health insurance probably will stay on the Senate Labor Committee's shelf until next year, Senator Murray (D., Mont.) said yesterday.

A half dozen other medical plans—including President Truman's universal health insurance program—already are gathering dust on the same shelf.

The new measure, introduced today, is sponsored by Senator Hunt (D., Wyo.), a dentist. It is a voluntary plan which Hunt said would provide inexpensive protection for families—with income of $5000 or less a year.

The bill also would create a Cabinet-rank department of health and provide for Federal grants and loans to set up farmers' experimental health cooperatives. Federal money also would be made available to establish general purpose health facilities in rural and other shortage areas.

Navy Hopes To Dislodge 'Mo' Today

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Predicted northeast winds tonight hoisted Navy hopes to refloat the battleship Missouri Tuesday, two days ahead of schedule.

"There's a pretty good chance she might come off," a Naval spokesman said.

He had just scanned a bulletin that forecast actual high tide Tuesday will be 6 inches above predicted high tide for the date because of northeast winds to begin this evening and increase tonight. High tide is scheduled for 6:39 a. m.

Should the 6-inch excess materialize, there would be a water depth of 31 feet at the "Big Mo's" position in Chesapeake Bay. The charted depth there at mean low water is some 28 feet. Salvage experts say the ship's draft now is about 26 feet.

When the Missouri ran hard aground on a sand shoal January 17 she was drawing 36 feet 6 inches. She has since been lightened by removal of fuel oil, stores and ammunition.

The Navy has announced that Tuesday morning it will stage a "coordination rehearsal" for Thursday's scheduled refloating try. Tuesday's predicted high tide is 2 inches lower than Thursday's predicted high.

Despite the rehearsal tag, Tuesday's operation will use at full strength every device planned for Thursday's attempt.

Fears in GOP May Defeat Abolition of Electoral College

under the winner-take-all unit rule.

Arguing for the amendment were Senators Lodge (R., Mass.) and Smith (R., N. J.). Both contended it would get out a bigger vote by making for a real contest in every State. Smith said nobody has "sufficient prophetic power" to estimate the amendment's effect on either of the big parties.

Taft and Wherry Cool

But just this lack of prophetic power appeared to be worrying a lot of Republicans. Senators Taft (R., Ohio) and Wherry (R., Nebr.), the party leaders, both are cool if not hostile. A party conference is scheduled for 10 a. m. Wednesday, called by the amendment's enemies, not its friends.

Lodge succeeded in having a general statement favoring such a change written into the last GOP party platform. Hence some Republicans are expected to propose "further study" to avoid a downright repudiation of that pledge.

The Lodge argument runs this way: the GOP would gain electoral votes in the South under the amendment (Dewey got more popular votes than the Dixiecrats in 1948 but only the Dixiecrats won Southern electoral votes).

The counter argument is this: the GOP would gain a few Southern votes, yes, but would lose the big olocs represented by the Northern States—New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois, for example.

Losing What They Haven't

To which Lodge counters: that might have been true back in the days when those big States were "solid" Republican. But the Democrats have been carrying them so often in the past 20 years it's an illusion to say the Republicans would "lose" something they haven't got. Under the amendment they would have a fighting chance again because they would get credit for all the popular votes in States lost by only slight margins.

Senate Majority Leader Lucas reported yesterday President Truman would not oppose the amendment (his signature is not necessary, however, on such a measure).

Lucas also said he saw some virtue in a proposed amendment to let the House choose the President if no candidate received 40 percent of the vote. Lodge noted that 12 Presidents, including Truman, have been elected by a plurality rather than a majority. The smallest popular vote ever received by a President, he noted, was 38 percent for Lincoln in 1860.

Democrats Lining Up

One thing that has worried some Republicans is the way Southern Democrats have been lining up for the amendment. Senators Sparkman (D., Ala.) and Kefauver (D., Tenn.) spoke for it yesterday. Both took the tack that the two-party system it would bring to the South would force the party conventions and machinery in the future to pay more attention to the South rather than just assuming it is "solid" and not worth worrying about.

Other Southerners say privately they are for the amendment because it would strip the Negro and other minority groups of their power in the party. This would happen, they reason, because such groups could no longer "swing" the key or pivotal States with big electoral vote blocs.

68th Anniversary

Polio Victim In Rites at Hyde Park

Hyde Park, N. Y., Jan. 30. (AP). A little Texas girl, herself once a victim of infantile paralysis, today stood at the grave of Franklin D. Roosevelt who overcame the handicap of the disease to become President.

Ceremonies there marked his sixty-eighth birthday anniversary.

Eight-year-old Wanda Wiley of Austin, Tex., 1950 March of Dimes girl, watched solemn'y as a wreath of red carnations was laid on the grave by Pat Russell of Birmingham, March of Dimes State chairman for Alabama.

A floral tribute from President Truman was placed by Col. John J. Morrow, chief of staff at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y. A detachment of cadet officers took part in the ceremony.

Henry Morgenthau, jr., former Secretary of the Treasury, put a wreath on the grave in behalf of the Franklin De no Roosevelt Foundation, and the Roosevelt Home Club of Hyde Park placed a wreath of chrysanthemums.

A group of 22 Hyde Park elementary school children presented Wanda with a March of Dimes poster. She had been greeted at Hyde Park by Mrs. Roosevelt and later said, "I think she is such a lovely lady."

haired Mrs. Conner fixed her eyes on Commonwealth's Attorney Howard W. Smith, jr., and gave little outward show of emotion.

In a clear, cool voice, she continued:

"He asked me several times if I wanted him to kill me. I kept saying, 'No. Put the gun down. Put the gun on the bed.'

"He asked me for a cigarette. I got one. He lit it.

"I said, "Please put the gun down—maybe we can do something for the children.'

"'No,' he said. He said he knew they were dead, and that he had to kill himself too.

"I said, 'Don't shoot yourself—that would be just another killing . . .'

"Then I went out in the hall and got my coat and opened the door and went out. He said, 'Where are you going,' and I said, 'I am going out.'"

Mrs. Conner testified that neither she nor her husband was aware of the true nature of his illness. Up to the tragedy, she said, she had never known why he failed to receive his Army commission, other than having been discharged for physical disability.

Before Mrs. Conner took the stand, Defense Attorney T. Brooke Howard presented testimony to show that Conner was given a medical discharge from the Army as a psychotic after graduating fifteenth out of 380 in the class of 1933.

The court was told that Conner spent June, 1933, unde observation at Walter Reed General Hospital. A medical board held then, the court was informed, that Conner's "condition is such that if he is ever placed under special stress or strain, the chances are good he will go into another period of psychotic episodes."

He was discharged from the Army at that time.

Testimony to the effect that Conner was overloaded with work at Fort Belvoir was given by associates there.

His superior, Col. Oscar B. Beasley, said Conner became head of the prefabricated structures branch of the Engineering Research and Development Laboratories in October, 1949.

"He did not have sufficient help," he said, "he should have had a minimum of six, preferably eight engineers." He had two.

It was also testified that Conner had been attending college courses at night, three times a week.

Dr. Harold Stevens, Washington psychiatrist who examined Conner at Alexandria jail, said he was suffering from a "manic depressive psychosis, depressed type.

"It is sheer accident he did not kill himself in previous depressions," Dr. Stevens said.

House Selects New Chaplain

House accepted his resignation, was praised for his services by many members of the House:

House Democratic Leader John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, said that Dr. Montgomery has one of the "fine minds" of the Nation and "left an influence on the minds of everyone with whom he dealt."

The retiring chaplain, who lives at 100 Maryland ave. ne., formerly served as pastor of Calvary and Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Churches here. He became pastor emeritus of Metropolitan Church in 1933.

Dr. Braskamp is dean of the 42 Presbyterian ministers in Washington in terms of length of service. He has spent his entire ministry in Washington.

He came to Washington following his graduation from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1911 to become an assistant pastor of what is now National Presbyterian Church, Connecticut ave. and N st. nw.

In 1920, while pastor of Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, he was instrumental in merging the congregation of that church and Gunton-Temple. Under his leadership the congregation erected the present church at 16th and Newton sts. nw., which was dedicated in 1924.

In June, 1947, Dr. Braskamp received the Knight of the Order of Orange Nassau from Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands for his work for Dutch relief during the war.

He is a graduate of the University of Michigan, Princeton University, Princeton Seminary, and holds the Doctor of Divinity degree from Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.

He served as moderator of the Presbytery of Washington City in 1929 and in 1940 was moderator of the Synod of Baltimore, composed of 153 Presbyterian churches in Washington, Baltimore and New Castle.

Dr. Braskamp, who lives at 1421 Montague st. nw., is married and has two children, Anne Bernice, 22, and Bernard, jr., 18. He is a native of Alton, Iowa.

General Brannan Honored by Two Service Groups

The Judge Advocates Association and the Judge Advocates Chapter of the Reserve Officers Association joined last night in a dinner honoring Maj. Gen. Edward M. (Mike) Brannan, new judge advocate general of the Army. The dinner at the Continental Hotel was attended by 150.

Principal speaker was Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.), a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He talked informally on General Brannan's career and ability.

Among those attending were Maj. Gen. Reginald C. Harmon, judge advocate general of the Air Force; Rear Admiral George L. Russell, judge advocate general of the Navy, and Maj. Gen. Myron S. Cramer (retired), wartime judge advocate general of the Army. General Brannan is one of the few Army officers who is a graduate in law and also a graduate of the U. S. Military Academy at West Point.

Total of U. S. Workers At 8-Year Low Mark

A new low since April, 1942, in the number of persons employed by the executive agencies of the Federal Government was reported yesterday by the Civil Service Commission.

It is said that the executive departments on January 1 had 1,979,000 persons on their payrolls, including 151,800 overseas. This was 8600 under the December 1 total.

Declines for January were recorded by more than twice as many agencies as reported increases, it said. The Postoffice Department accounted for 27 percent of the total, with 535,800, followed by the Army, with 316,500, the Navy with 290,500 and the Air Force with 150,000.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

WHEN LARRY MacPHAIL introduced night baseball to the major leagues in 1939, he was ridiculed as a screwball who would try anything once. MacPhail was a-geam with his notion that it might improve the sagging attendance in his Cincinnati park, but the rest of the club owners were aghast at such heretical tampering with their great daylight game.

MacPhail's mazda madness didn't take hold immediately. In Washington, Clark Griffith deplored the whole business and issued the pious statement that "baseball was meant to be played in God's own sunshine."

POVICH

One by one, though, the other clubs succumbed to the steady click of the turnstiles at MacPhail's night contests. The light towers began to go up all over both major leagues. Griffith, without need of a hearing aid, noted the merry jingle of the fans' dollars and agreed that the Lord's own sunshine might not be completely wasted if he played some games at night.

Evidence of the way they've embraced MacPhail's bright idea is now available. Release of the 1950 American League schedule shows 204 games booked at night, a new record and nearly one-third of all the league games.

GRIFFITH JACKED his Washington night games up to 43, 11 more than last season, by drafting Saturday nights into the scheme. Years ago he kicked over the traces when the late Judge Landis put a 14-game limit on night affairs into effect, and won his case by arguing that war-time Washington needed nocturnal contests.

"We have no night shift in Washington, unlike the industrial towns," Griffith pointed out, "and we have to give the war workers the most in relaxation so we need night games." With the end of the war, Griffith simply insists upon giving the workers the most in peace-time relaxation, and blew the lid off the limit on night play.

The Detroit Tigers were the last to resist the light towers. It is significant that the rich clubs like the Tigers, Red Sox and Yankees were among the most stubborn holdouts. Only the Chicago Cubs are now without a lighted park, but their position is uncommon. Attendance figures have never been a problem of the Cubs. With a last-place team in the 1949 race they drew the whopping total of 1,120,000 fans.

THE PLAYERS' squawks against night ball that were formerly heard are now reduced to a whisper and they no longer moan about how their eating and sleeping habits have been thrown out of kilter. They know that night game attendance helps to pay those fancy salaries they draw and if their revenue has not gone up as fast as that of the clubowners, it has nevertheless risen a lot.

It was the fashion some years back for the players to blame their slumps on night ball, particularly the hitters, but nobody pays heed anymore to such whinings. It has been established that the good hitters in daytime ball are the good ones under the lights, and that the same goes in fielding. And the lights are no longer any novelty. The players who came up from the minors in the last 10 years were teethed on nothing but night ball as a rule.

Ted Williams was spuawking back in 1948, that night games were a nuisance inasmuch as they affected his hitting. "You can't see the stitches or the spin on curve balls," complained Williams, "and that means a lot to a hitter." At the end of the season, Williams had hit .361 in 31 night games, it disclosed, second only to Lou Boudreau who hit .368 under the lights.

LONG AGO IT was established that the clubs which don't happen to win the pennant can't blame their failure on night ball. The finish of the 1948 pennant race was powerful evidence that the better teams win at all hours. In every case, all of the eighth clubs had night-game records that fitted exactly their positions in the league standings, from the pennant-winning Indians who had the best night record, to the last place White Sox who had the worst.

If the early attempt at lighting the parks were not completely satisfactory, they are now quite adequate. Electrical engineering has eradicated the shadows that once proved so troublesome, particularly to the outfielders.

Right now, Briggs Stadium in Detroit, is the best-lighted park in the majors. "But that is because it was the most recent park to be lighted," say the electrical men. "The next park that puts in the lights will take over that distinction because by that time we'll have some new gimmicks."

Over Larover

Sugar Ray Robinson Scores Easy TKO Before Only 3500

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 30 (AP).—Sugar Ray Robinson, the world's welterweight champion, won by a technical knockout over George Larover of Philadelphia here tonight in the fourth round of an overweight scheduled 10. Referee George Fitch stopped the bout with Larover, badly beaten, still on his feet but unable to defend himself. A crowd of 3500 paid a net gate of $4200.

The champion had things his own way throughout the one-sided fracas. After toying with Larover for three rounds, Robinson clipped the Philadelphian with a right cross shortly after the fourth round opened. Larover went down for eight and when he arose, he ran into a flurry of crisp punches that left him helpless.

Graham Defeats Bernard Docusen

Philadelphia, Jan. 30 (AP).—Otis Graham, 151, Philadelphia, won a surprise 10-round decision over Bernard Docusen, 148, New Orleans, in the windup at the arena tonight. The loss snapped a Docusen string of victories at 12 straight. Percy Bassett, 132, Philadelphia, scored a technical knockout over Eduardo Carrasco, 136, Peru, with a volley of rights to the ribs at 1:46 of the fourth round of the semi-windup.

Chicago Cardinals Will Name New Coach Wednesday

Chicago, Jan. 30 (AP).—The Chicago Cardinals of the National-American Football League will announce their new head coach Wednesday.

Ray Bennigsen, club president, said today he had finished interviewing five candidates the past weekend.

"I can't say who they were, but our selection will be made Wednesday," he said.

Rumored to be among the leading candidates are Clark Shaughnessy, head coach of the Los Angeles Rams, and Curly Lambeau, veteran bigwig of the Green Bay Packers.

Sonny Boy West Registers TKO

Baltimore, Jan. 30 (AP).—Sonny Boy West scored a technical knockout tonight over LeRoy Willis of Detroit when Willis was unable to come out for the eighth of a scheduled 10-round match.

West, a promising 136-pounder from Washington, poured it on the Detroiter in every round. He constantly beat Willis, at 135 pounds, to the punch.

Willis suffered a cut eye in the third, but the injury was not bothersome until the sixth, when it began spouting blood. A boxing commission physician ordered the match stopped before the bell rang for the eighth.

Ballston Wins, 68-20

Ballston's unlimited team romped to a 68-20 victory over South Post Fort Myer last night. Zeke Zimmerman, with 26 points, and Ernie Brown, with 18, led Ballston to its fifteenth victory in 16 starts.

Lane Paces Prep Jayvees

Dick Lane scored 10 points to pace the Georgetown Prep JayVees to their third win in five starts as they defeated Landon JayVees, 31-28, yesterday at Landon.

Anderson Returns to Holy Cross

Worcester, Mass., Jan. 30 (A.P.) Dr. Eddie Anderson is returning to Holy Cross whose rooters hope the skillful physician-football coach can return the Crusaders to the football glory they enjoyed under him nearly a decade ago.

Anderson and the college got together today on a five-year contract for an unannounced salary.

In Iowa City, Ia., Anderson said "I'm very happy to return and I'm looking forward to it with a great deal of pleasure."

His selection wasn't too much of a surprise after his sudden resignation Saturday from the University of Iowa.

Some Pleased, Some Not

The majority seemed pleased.

One official, declining use of his name, said, "He's the man we wanted all the time. He comes high and we hope it's worth it. He made some concessions."

Another college official, also demanding anonymity, wasn't so happy.

"You know his record at Iowa wasn't anything wonderful." (at Iowa Anderson's teams won 35 games, lost 33 and tied two.)

Anderson, who had two undefeated teams here, quit Holy Cross in a huff after the 1938 season when his contract expired. He wanted more money than the college was willing to pay. Concensus was that $1000 kept the coach and Holy Cross apart.

No terms were announced today but estimates of his salary for the next five seasons run as high as $15,000 a year. Osmanski had been signed to a five-year contract for $12,000 and has completed two years of it. Iowa paid Anderson $12,500.

He Won 47, Lost 7

In two seasons under Osmanski, Holy Cross won only 5 games and lost 15, climaxed by a 76-0 pasting from its arch rival, Boston College.

While Anderson coached here from 1933 through 1938 his teams won 47 games, lost 7 and tied 2. In 1935 and 1937 the Crusaders were undefeated.

One of the few college coaches to return to the scene of former labors, he has been given a free hand in naming his assistants.

While here before he practiced medicine but tonight Holy Cross spokesmen knew nothing of any plans he might have in that field.

A 1922 alumnus of Notre Dame, Anderson began his coaching career at Columbia (now Loras College) in Dubuque, Iowa, that same year. After three years there he moved to De Paul in Chicago and remained through 1931.

After the 1942 season Anderson went into the Army and returned to Iowa for the 1946 season.

The all-time record for teams tutored by Anderson, selected as coach of the year in 1939, is 119 victories, 78 losses and 11 ties.

Washington State Makes It Official: It's Evashevski

Pullman, Wash., Jan. 30 (AP).—Washington State College confirmed today the appointment of Forest Evashevski as its head football coach.

Selection of the one-time University of Michigan backfield star as head football coach at WSC was reported yesterday by the Associated Press.

Director of Athletics Robert Brumblay said Evashevski had accepted a five-year contract. Other terms of the agreement were not announced.

Montgomery J. C. Wins

Herb Palmer led Montgomery Junior College to a 48-40 victory over the alumni last night at Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School. Palmer was high man with 12 points.

Eagles After 10th Win

Mexico University's Tourists Play American Here Tonight

Mexico University's basketball tourists stop off again in Washington tonight to meet American University at 8:45 a'clock in the Ward Circle gym.

Staff Cassell's Eagles, idle the past 10 days, are favored to become the first D. C. team to win 10 games. They've lost six.

Mexico appeared here last two weeks ago, losing to Howard University at Uline Arena, 61-47. The Pumas had an 8-5 record before starting their marathon tour of the United States. They haven't been able to win one here yet.

Senors Carlos Bru, Rolando Rubalcava and Luis Trevino lead the small but speedy Mexican team.

A. U. has four players averaging 10 points or better per game. Chief point-getters and their averages are LeRoy Ishman (13.4), Bob Lamon (12.2); Ronnie Garshag (11.3), and Sherwood Webster (11.1).

In other games tonight Wilson Teachers play at Salisbury and Virginia Tech meets Richmond.

If They Wind Up in Series

Cards Will Reward Steady Fans

ST. LOUIS, JAN. 30 (AP).—If you want to see the St. Louis Cardinals in a World Series game you'd better buy tickets to the regular season contests.

Under a new arrangement, as explained today by President Fred M. Saigh, a permanent card index record will be made of all ticket purchases, including those made at the last minute at ticket windows.

Ticket allotments for World Series games would then be made at the end of the season, based on the applicant's attendance during the season.

Coaltown Has Fast Miami Workout In Tuneup for Widener Stakes

Miami, Fla., Jan. 30 (AP).—Coaltown went three-quarters of a mile in 1:11 today, serving warning to all that he is the horse to beat in the $50,000 Widener Stakes February 25.

The fast time was made in a workout with Dexter Finney, exercise boy. The time compared with the track record of 1:09.3 held by the Calumet Farm speedster.

Theory, Calumet's Kentucky Derby hopeful, went five furlongs in 1:01.2 in his workout.

3-Ounce Fish—That's Right, Ounce—Wins St. Paul Winter-Fishing Contest

ST. PAUL, MINN., Jan. 30 (AP).—A three-and-a-half ounce crappie won the St. Paul Winter Carnival ice fishing contest at White Bear Lake Sunday.

Charles Holesky of St. Paul, a veteran fisherman, got a handsome trophy and a completely equipped motor boat as his prize.

His crappie was the largest game fish caught during the hour and a half the contest ran. The temperature at the time was 16 below zero. Some 4000 fishermen participated.

Guepe Saws Wood With A Purpose

By Robert Moore

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—It's Arthur L. Guepe, the football coach, in autumn. But when winter comes, Guepe turns cabinet maker.

And Arthur L. Guepe, the 34-year-old head coach of the University of Virginia, has become a good cabinet maker, too. A lot of Guepe's friends will vouch for his cabinet-making efficiency because of useful gifts he's made for them.

From his basement shop have come such items as chests of drawers, tables, desks, a cradle, picture frames, frames for mirrors, stools, plates and bowls, outdoor furniture.

Guepe turned cabinet maker in 1940. The missus was responsible. The Christmas after Guepe came to Virginia as Frank Murray's youthful backfield mentor, Mrs. Guepe gave him a power-driven circular saw.

"I had been away a good deal that fall," Guepe grinned, "and I guess she was working on a scheme to keep me home. But the only things I had ever made were a table and a jewel box for my mother when I took manual training in the eighth grade."

Nevertheless, Art went to work learned rapidly by practice and observation. He added hand tools to his shop, a lathe and drill press. Some of them, like the saw, came as Christmas and birthday gifts from his wife.

Since Guepe became head coach in 1946, he hasn't had as much time to devote to his winter hobby. Too many banquets and speeches follow a football season like the last one, particularly when your team beats Pennsylvania for the first time in history.

AHEAD COACH must find time, too, Guepe says, to review the season in pictures, noting most the plays that failed and why. Varsity and freshman rosters must be screened and plans worked out to replace graduating players.

"And there's loads of correspondence," Guepe said. "Enough to bury me."

Despite lack of time, Guepe hopes to get started soon on his cabinet masterpiece—a copy of an antique desk. He has several miror frames in production now, including a baby-size one for his 5-year-old daughter, Ann.

'Furniture making is a lot of fun," said Guepe. "You are never without something to do—when you want to do it. A piece of furniture is in no hurry to be made and will always be waiting for you."

Guepe raised a hand and spread his fingers.

"But you have to be awake when things start humming or you might lose a digit — like this."

During the early days of Guepe's cabinet-making apprenticeship, the tip of the second finger on his left hand was sliced off "while I absent-mindedly guided a piece of wood into the blade of my joiner."

Houtteman Voted 'Most Courageous' By Writers

Philadelphia, Jan. 30 (AP).—Art Houtteman, 22-year-old pitcher for

The youthful right-hander was named "most courageous athlete" of 1949 by the Philadelphia Sporting Writers Association.

The youthful right-hander was honored because of his remarkable comeback last year after he was left near death in an auto collision in March.

The sporting writes also honored Steve Van Buren of the Philadelphia Eagles, National Football League champions, as the "outstanding athlete of 1949" and Leon Hart, All-America end from Notre Dame, as "college lineman of the year."

Robert Villemain Beats Jean Stock

Bolling Upsets Fort Myer, 66-60

Bolling Flyers took a 66-60 decision last night from Fort Myer at Bolling Air Base. It was only the eighth loss for Fort Myer in 26 games.

Bolling, with a 9-13 mark, was led to its upset by John Duignan who scored 17 points. The losers' Tom Stoll was high, though, with 23.

Terps May Play W&M Next Fall

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Maryland and William and Mary will probably meet in football in the New Byrd Stadium November 18, it was learned last night.

Both schools must switch a couple of football dates to seal the bargain, but that appeared likely to be accomplished today.

W & M has a tentative date with the University of Houston on that date, but indications are the Indians from Williamsburg, Va., will either cancel or reschedule the Houston game for the more financially tempting clash with the Old Liners.

Ten Games for Eeach

The Terps are slated to play West Virginia on November 18, but have already asked West Virginia to move the game back to November 25, which the Mountaineers have agreed to do.

The Terps and W&M, a perennial Southern Conference powerhouse, have met only twice before. In 1945 the Indians thrashed Maryland, 41-14, and a year later beat the College Parkers, 33-6. If the game is carded, it will give each school 10 games for next fall.

"We'd like very much to play Maryland in its new stadium next fall, even though we know Tatum will have a better team than we will," said Coach Rube McCray of W&M.

Strong Slate for Terps

"If we're able to add W&M, we'd have one of the strongest schedules in the country," Tatum replied. "And as far as Maryland having a better team than William and Mary, that's just McCray's opinion. His team should be terrific, I understand."

The Terps have nine games definitely carded. At home they'll meet V. P. I. (in the old Byrd Stadium); Navy, Georgetown, George Washington and North Carolina State. Away, the Terps will clash with Michigan State, North Carolina, Duke and West Virginia.—

Caps Invade Denver for Game Tonight

The Washington Caps invade Denver, Colo., tonight for a National Basketball Association game with the Denver Nuggets, trying to pull over the .500 mark.

The Caps now have a 22-22 record.

Statistics on the Caps' scoring reveal that Jack Nichols is still on top with 577 points in 43 games for an average of 13.4. Fred Scolari used a 30-point performance against St. Louis to pull up to the 13 point per game mark with 548 points in 42 games.

Chick Reiser and Bones McKinney are fighting it out for third place in the Caps' scoring parade. Reiser has 363 points in 44 games for an 8.3 average while Bones has crammed his 359 points into 37 games for a 9.7 average.

Caps scoring statistics:

West Will Meet Friday's Winner

Sonny Boy West, local lightweight, will meet the winner of the Bob Montgomery-Aldo Minelli 10-round main event at Uline Arena Friday night.

West has agreed to fill a March date against the victor. Both Minelli and Montgomery are agreeable.

Belk's Baskets Win For Parker-Gray

Lonnie Belk tallied a field goal and foul in the last 30 seconds to carry Parker-Gray to a 32-29 victory over previously unbeaten St. Emma's in a Virginia High Conference game last night in Alexandria.

In addition to his last-minute heroics, Belk was high man with 15 points. The victory over the Rock Castle team gives Parker-Gray a 10-3 mark.

Will NCAA Frown?

Player's Dad Gives Tatum Ham in Spite of Sanity Code

THE FATHER of a Buffalo, Pa., high school quarterback Jim Tatum would like to see enroll at Maryland has given the Terps' head coach a 12-pound ham . . . If this practice becomes widespread, the NCAA will probably write a new sanity code to regulate the amount of aid a player can give his coach . . . If North Carolina State's basketball team continues to pack crowds into its new two-million-dollar field house, State's basketball team will outdraw its football team. The magnificent 12,000 capacity plant has already been filled four times this season . . . When Virginia U. meets West Virginia in basketball at Morgantown Wednesday night it will be the first game between the two in 21 years . . .

DUKE COACH Wallace Wade is the No. 1 choice for the $12,000 post of Southern Conference football commissioner. He's been sounded out by the Conference's selection committee and insiders say he'll accept soon . . . When Buddy Lewis received his 1950 contract from the Nats which called for a pay slash he quipped: "They didn't cut me—they amputated" . . . Maryland's 10-man varsity boxing squad is the best atended in the land with three coaches, two managers and two trainers on hand to supervise the fighters' needs . . . Don't blame the Caps for not being so hot in Minneapolis Sunday when they got beat by 28 points. The temperature was 14 below zero . . .

NORTH CAROLINA U. football officials deny any knowledge of a "purge," but it's a fact that three of Coach Carl Snavely's top assistants have resigned since the Cotton Bowl game . . . Maryland U. requested the State comptroller to pay the $4300 air travel bill for transporting the Terps to Miami in order to save $650 in Federal Tax . . . The comptroller was given a check for $17,500, Maryland's guarantee for the Miami game, and Terps' officials were unable to understand why he queried the request to pay the bill . . . Bones McKinney is expected to do better at his "night" at Uline Arena next month than Bob Feerick did last year. Feerick was presented with a car for which he paid more than half himself. 'Dress Optional'

Boxing Ads Go Society

Bangor, Me., Jan. 30 (AP).—Boxing is going ritzy in Bangor. To advertise bouts at City Hall Thursday, promoters took to the society pages with this invitation—paid for, of course:

". . . of particular interest will be the main contest . . . Mr. Albert Couture of Lewiston and Mr. Theodore Brassley of Portland will be the participants . . ."

Mr. Couture, in his own circle, is better known as "Roughhouse Al." He also happens to be State middleweight champ. Most boxing fans refer to Mr. Brassley as "The Tiger."

"Both gentlemen," the ad continues, "are superbly conditioned and each has avowed to establish himself as the other's superior."

Along with the boxing Thursnight, there will be girl ushers, tuxedos and restrained language. The ads point out, however, that "dress is optional."

Gavilan 'Outstanding'

Havana, Jan. 30 (AP).—Kid Gavilan, Cuban welterweight, today was named Cuba's outstanding male athlete of 1949.

Carabella KO'd For 1st Time by Charley Titone

By West McLean
Post Reporter

With a couple of savage punches last night at Turner's Arena, Brooklyn Featherweight Charley Titone ended Danny Carabella's record of never having been knocked out.

For the record, Carabella's streak was snapped at 2:15 of the third round, victim of a right hook.

It was threatened as early as the first round when Titone landed a right cross that floored Carabella. His handlers later said their boy never recovered from the first-round blow.

Gene Smith, touted as a promising local featherweight, won a unanimous decision over Brooklyn's Johnny Lemons in a special six-round semiwindup.

Smith wasn't too impressive chalking up his fifth straight pro triumph. He floored Lemons twice in the first round and once in the sixth

Arnold Curry, 133½, McKeesport, Pa., literally didn't have the stomach in his second pro fight against Chink Williams, 134, Washington. Curry complained of illness and couldn't answer the bell for the fifth and last round of his preliminary.

In the other five-rounder, Al Wright, 167½, reversed last week's decision by gaining the nod over Kid Wolfe, 171½.

In four-round bouts Ape Kaiser, 139, took a unanimous decision over Cy Redman, 135, and Tommy Rupart, 144, knocked out Frank Ball, 141½, in 1:40 of the third

Comeback Halted

Gloomy Ben Hogan Decides To Take Long Tourney Rest

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 30 (U.P.)—Gloomy and disappointed at his attempts to stage a comeback in the competitive golf wars he dominated so long, Bantam Ben Hogan said today he was en route home for a long rest.

Hogan stopped briefly here for an unannounced visit at the hospital where he waged a long, uphill fight against near-fatal injuries suffered in an auto-bus collision almost a year ago today.

"I'm going home to Fort Worth to rest a long time," Hogan said. "I don't know whether I'll play any more tournaments. I'm positively not going to play in cold weather, or where the schedule calls for 36 holes a day."

It was last February 2 that Hogan's automobile collided with a Greyhound bus near Van Horn, gravely injuring the bronzed little links star.

As last year, Hogan was en route home from the Phoenix, Ariz., tournament. But, this time, he was traveling by train.

Holy Cross Still No. 1; Duquesne 2d

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—For the third straight week, unbeaten Holy Cross tops the Associated Press basketball poll with almost 60 per cent of the first-place votes.

Although the Crusaders were idle last week, they drew 92 of a possible 157 first-place ballots from the Nation's basketball writers and sportscasters.

Holy Cross and Duquesne, the only unbeaten major powers in the country, have identical 14-0 season records, but the Crusaders piled up a point edge in the poll, 1446 to 1040. Points are figured on the basis of 10 for a first-place vote and so on down to 1 for tenth place.

The top teams (first place votes in parentheses and records including January 28 games with points on 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1 basis):

Virginia House Votes Down Game Commission Bill

Board Asked Control Over Open Seasons

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (AP). — The House today killed the Yates bill to authorize the Game Commission to prescribe open seasons on fish and game and methods by which they could be taken.

The action came on advancing the bill to third reading. The vote was 48 to 44 not to advance the bill. The House then refused to reconsider its action, thereby killing the bill.

Before killing the measure the House had voted down amendments by Delegates Samuel W. Swanson of Pittsylvania and Paul Crockett of York which would have destroyed the purpose of the measure.

Swanson's amendment would have eliminated from the commission's authority any bird which could fly or any creature which walks, crawls or creeps on the earth. Crockett's amendment would have provided that no man could be deprived of his liberty or property under any regulation of the commission.

Chairman Edmund T. Dejarnette of the Game and Fish Committee fought for passage of the measure as important to Virginia and Virginia traditions. He said the House was discussing one of Virginia's greatest natural resources. The present game laws he described as intricate and complicated.

He denied that the bill would repeal all local acts and said it would invalidate only those dealing with the open season and how game and fish might be taken.

Delegate Crockett asserted that sportsmen who furnish the money for the game department don't want any more administrative law, but want the Legislature to enact the law and the commission to enforce it. He said if the members passed the Yates bill they were going to run into trouble back in their home counties.

Agriculture Seeks 2658 New Employes Under Proposed 1951 Budget

The Agriculture Department would be able to hire 2658 additional employes if Congress okays its proposed 1951 budget.

Ralph Roberts, the department's budget officer, informed the House Appropriations Committee that 1500 of the new workers would be needed to carry out recent legislation enacted by Congress.

The major increases, Roberts said, would be in these agencies: Forest Service, 735; Farmers Home Administration, 661; Agricultural Research Administration, 327; Federal Crop Insurance, 205; an additional 227 employes to handle acreage allotments and marketing quotas, and 327 new people to help control the white pine blister rust program.

STORY: Members of Congress yesterday received a flood of postal cards from Houston, Tex. with this message on them:

"The best argument against a FEPC is President Truman's blast at Columnist Drew Pearson when he said: 'No S. O. B. can tell me who to hire or to fire.'"

HEALTH PROGRAM: The Federal employe health program was again attacked by members of the House Appropriations Committee during budget hearings of the Public Health Service. The committee last year cut the health program appropriation but it was restored by the Senate. The Public Health Service administers the employe program. At one point during the hearings, Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, the Surgeon General, said:

"I would like to make a little plea for the Government employe. We could drop this activity and get rid of a headache because it is a hard one to carry on. The Government employe, by and large, does not have some of the favored treatment that the employes in outside industry gets in terms of sick-room and on-the-job service. It pays industry to check the fellow who has too many accidents and problems. In Government, the gaps are wide."

NOTES: The Interior Department is charged with enforcing 5233 different laws dealing with American Indian tribes . . . At Agriculture, Harold K. Hill tomorrow will take over as assistant administrator for production of the Production and Marketing Administration. John H. Dean is being promoted to succeed Hill as deputy assistant administrator for commodity operations . . . Federal employment on January 1 had dropped to 1,979,500, the lowest over-all total since April, 1942. The employe population here showed a small increase to 212,400, but it's a "paper" increase since several thousand employes in the outlying sections were counted for the first time.

TOP JOBS: The Federal Trial Examiners Conference has appealed to the Civil Service Commission to allocate hearing examiner jobs in the new GS-11 ($11,200 to $12,000) and GS-17 ($12,200 to $13,000) grades.

Meanwhile, the commission's classification division is about ready to recommend allocations to the "elite 400" jobs. The agencies suggested 996 officials be placed in the 400 jobs. The President has the final authority to allocate 25 persons in GS-18 ($14,000), but it's a good bet the entire list will be cleared at the White House before agreements on it are reached.

The classification division, incidentally, is making a study of all top jobs in the Federal service—those recommended for higher grades by the agencies as well as all others.

JOB NEWS: An exam for shorthand reporters at $3450 to $4600 entrance salaries will be announced soon by Civil Service—Also coming up are tests for technologists in the fields of paper, rubber and oil products, $3825 to $10,000 to start . . . Another new test will be for laboratory mechanic jobs in 11 fields of electronics at $2450 to $5400 starting salaries . . . Only 55 persons were given eligible ratings on the recent test for plate printer . . . Civil Service is setting up a register of 1648 persons who passed the recent test for information specialist and proofreading clerk.

A new test is now open for traffic and transportation specialist, public utilities rate examiner, and tariff examiner. The jobs pay from $3100 to $6400.

Holtzoff Accused of Coercing 'Snags' Jury

Gamblers' Counsel Charge Judge With Causing a 'Denial Of a 'Fair Trial'

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

District Court Judge Alexander Holtzoff was accused in the Court of Appeals yesterday of strong-arming the jury which convicted William "Snags" Lewis and two others Friday of operating a lottery, described as a multi-million dollar business.

The accusations were made in a petition filed by Attorneys William H. Collins and Myron G. Ehrlich, in an effort to get Lewis and Frank Billeci out on bond pending hearing of their appeal.

Judge Holtzoff denied the convicted gamblers bond after hearing that at least five efforts had been made to tamper with the Lewis jury, and that the Government had "very reliable" information that Lewis and Billeci had continued "their illicit activities" in the 11 months between the time of their arrest, and their trial.

FBI 'Making Progress'

FBI agents, investigating jury tampering charges, reportedly were "making progress" yesterday.

In their petition for bond, Collins and Ehrlich charged that during the 18-day trial Judge Holtzoff

1. Made "glaring errors of law."
2. Caused "denial of a fair trial by (his) misconduct."
3. Used a "highly prejudicial manner of delivery."
4. Addressed the jury with "improper gestures and intonations" including "great emphasis and crescendo" and "hardly audible remarks."
5. Effected "coercion of the jury" in an "effort to impose upon the jury his own opinion."
6. "Actually directed the jury to return a verdict of guilty."

'Deliberate and Emphatic'

Among Judge Holtzoff's "gestures and improper intonations," the petition charged, were "frequent leaning over toward the jury and pointing to them with his hand in a deliberate and emphatic manner and raising his voice for the obvious purpose of indicating to the jury the special emphasis placed on the particular points favorable to the prosecution.

"As a matter of fact, the court's statement that the jury could render a verdict of guilty was made with great emphasis and crescendo, but, in telling the jurors they could render a verdict of not guilty, the remarks of the court were barely audible."

Assistant United States Attorney William Hitz, who prosecuted the case, said he will file a reply to the petition as soon as possible, probably Thursday.

Hitz Claims Affidavits

Hitz said his reply to the petition filed yesterday will include affidavits supporting the Government contention that Lewis and Billeci continued to operate in violation of the District lottery laws.

Lewis, alleged head of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate; Attilio Acolatti, a news vendor convicted in December of threatening a Government witness, and Billeci, a circulation employe of the Washington Times-Herald at the time of his arrest—were on trial for 18 days. A jury of seven men and five women deliberated 19 hours. All three are still in jail. Lewis was sentenced to serve 10 to 30 months, Billeci, eight to 27 months, and Acalotti, eight to 24 months.

Yesterday in District Court the Government dropped its case against Philip Samakow, alias Phil Harris, 1360 Peabody st. nw., for lack of evidence. Samakow was another of the 36 men indicted by the special gambling grand jury.

Cases against four other men, indicted by the special grand jury, have also been dropped by the Government.

Also in District Court yesterday, two more gambling cases in which Acalotti is a defendant were continued until February 27.

But It's Nervous

Heifer Not Dangerous, Court Rules

. . . Skittish, not dangerous

A heifer is not an inherently dangerous animal, Judge Richmond B. Keech of District Court ruled yesterday.

The young cow may well be skittish, is indeed nervous, but beyond that the court would not go.

The ruling tossed out of court a $50,000 damage suit brought by Alan Shane, 17, of Walkersville, Md., against Arnold B. McKee, an automobile dealer, and sometimes farmer. Shane, who was working for McKee on a Hyattstown, Md., farm in 1947, said a heifer broke loose and crushed a bone in Shane's foot.

The case turned on the point of whether heifers were dangerous as such and whether McKee should have known of their "dangerous propensities" and kept the animal securely locked.

Defense lawyers came up with the following quotation of Sir Matthew Hale (1609-1676):

"If a man have a beast, as a bull, cow, horse, or dog, used to hurt people, if the owner know not his quality, he is not punishable; but if the owner have notice of the quality of the beast, and it doth anybody hurt, he is chargeable with an action for it."

Judge Keech, who has a farm near Potomac, Md., but no heifers, said he recognized that young heifers were nervous but not, he added, dangerous.

Numbers Man Asks Arrest, Is Sentenced

A 35-year-old man, who, according to Municipal Court testimony, claimed his "boss" paid for "protection," was sentenced yesterday to serve 90 days or pay a $100 fine for possession of numbers slips.

The "boss" was identified in court as Sam Beard, who has asserted he is in the "pickle" business, but has been convicted of illegal gaming activities and income tax evasion.

Giving the testimony yesterday was Police Pvt. Cecil A. Jones, of the Second Precinct. He told it to Judge Armond W. Scott in the case of Lawrence Fields, 35, no fixed address, who pleaded guilty to the numbers-slip charge.

Jones said he stopped Saturday in the 1400 block of 11th st. nw., where Fields was on the sidewalk making a "commotion." Jones said Fields had obviously been drinking and was told to "quiet down" and leave.

The officer testified that he walked away and Fields followed, asking to be "locked up."

"Fields said he had a $60 hit on his numbers book and couldn't pay off," Jones related.

Jones said he asked Fields whether he realized the seriousness of what he was saying, and that Fields replied:

"Nothing will happen because my boss pays for protection."

According to Jones, Fields then identified the "boss" as Sam Beard, who professes to be in the pickle business but once served 53 months in jail for gaming and 13 months for income tax evasion.

Mr. Fox Now Making Home at Dr. Mann's

The silver fox, which led several hundred District "hunters" on a chase through downtown Washington last Friday, is now at home at the Zoo.

The animal was captured on the Treasury Department grounds and kept at the Animal Rescue League until yesterday. One person appeared on the chance the fox might be his lost pet, but he was disappointed. Where the fox came from is still a mystery.

Probers Set D. C. Crime Hearing Date

Special House Unit Plans Open Session On Feb. 6; Puts Off Gambling Inquiry

Public hearings on the crime and law-enforcement situation in Washington will open at 10 a. m., next Monday before a special District subcommittee of the House.

This was decided by the subcommittee last night after an hour-long meeting.

The subcommittee decided not to embark "at this time" on a special inquiry into gambling here, but will consider it as a part of the general crime picture, Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.), the chairman, said. But he and the committee left the way completely open to undertake the special gambling inquiry later.

Further, Hyman Fischbach, chief counsel for the subcommittee, said after the meeting that "gambling is a part of the whole crime picture, which will certainly come under investigation. Any special emphasis on it (gambling) now would tend to subordinate homicide and rape."

Report Received

The committee received a report from Fischbach on his findings and those of staff investigators to date since the subcommittee's organization. But neither Judge Davis nor Fischbach would comment on its contents.

After Judge Davis announced deferment of decision on a special gambling inquiry, he was asked why this was done.

"This committee was set up to carry out certain definite duties," he said. "We have reached the point where we feel it is logical to proceed with regularity before going off on any tangents—such as gambline—at this moment.

Came Up Recently

"The gambling angle came up rather recently, and it was the committee's opinion that we do not want to subordinate the present investigation to gambling at this point."

Asked if there was any recommendation for a special gambling inquiry, Judge Davis said:

"The question was discussed. There was no objection to going ahead with a gambling investigation, but it was decided this was not the logical time to make this decision."

Judge Davis said that he "visualizes" that the hearings on the general crime and law enforcement situation will take at least 8 to 10 days, and that some afternoon sessions may be held at the convenience of the subcommittee members. He said the hearings will deal with all Government agencies having to do with crime and law enforcement.

"It (the subcommittee) will begin with the police department because that is the first agency having contact with crime," he said.

Other Agencies

After that will come the committing courts, the prosecution office, the trial courts, the probation system, and corrections.

He said the hearings will follow the sequence of crime and its results. The committee will take up individual cases which are "typical in each stage" he said.

"Of course," he said, "gambling will come as part of the general inquiry into the crime situation. We didn't decide for or against a special investigation. We didn't consider it for a definite decision. We merely deferred action."

Judge Davis said all decisions of the subcommittee yesterday were unanimous. Also present were Representatives Sid Simpson (R., Ill.) and Olin Teague (D., Tex.). Representatives Howard Smith (D., Va.) and James W. Wadsworth (R., N. Y.), were absent, but Judge Davis said he had talked with them about the subject matter of the meeting.

Senate Postpones Gambling Probe Bill

By the United Press

The Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday deferred until next Monday consideration of a bill to authorize an investigation of interstate gambling.

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) said the measure will come before the full committee then after amendments have been submitted. The resolution has already been approved by a Judiciary Subcommittee.

Kefauver would not predict what action the committee will take. But he said Judiciary Committee members have shown a "very friendly interest."

Shea Named D. C. Welfare Board Head

Gerard Shea

Gerard M. Shea, 37-year-old superintendent of the Industrial Home School, yesterday was named by the Commissioners to the post of director of welfare.

The Commissioners held a special meeting to confirm Shea. His appointment was the unanimous recommendation of the Board of Public Welfare.

Shea, who has served as head of the Industrial Home School since May 1948, succeeds John W. Tramburg as director of welfare. Tramburg resigned last Thursday to become director of welfare in Wisconsin. His resignation is effectvie February 24.

Shea said yesterday he will spend the next month becoming familiar with phases of the welfare program other than institutional. Most of his 11-year career as a social service worker has been with institutions, he said.

A native of Boston, Shea is a graduate of Boston College with degrees of master of arts and master of science in social work. He was a student social worker with Catholic Charities in Boston prior to 1941 when he moved to Brooklyn to supervise the foster home program of the Angel Guardian Home.

He served as Juvenile Court probation officer for the District during 1942 before entering the Navy.

Once before Shea was promoted to fill a post formerly held by Tramburg. He was assistant director of the Industrial Home School under Tramburg and was named director when Tramburg was appointed to head up the city's welfare program.

Shea is married and the father of two children, Gerard, 6, and Richard, 4.

Falls Church Defers Vote On Charter

The Falls Church city council last night deferred until Friday night a final vote on a proposed charter for the city, after making a number of revisions in earlier charter proposals.

The council also added a new provision which would authorize it to borrow money for increased operating costs in the event of annexation of nearby territory. City officials are now working on an annexation plan which would take in about 7 square miles of adjacent Fairfax County.

The loan provision was incorporated, City Attorney LeRue Van Meter said, because State law would prevent the city from utilizing any revenue from newly acquired territory until it had extended for public improvement at least 12 percent of assessed valuation in the new area.

Money borrowed pending receipt of revenue from the new territory would have to be paid back within four years of annexation.

The council amended an earlier charter provision permitting expulsion of a council member by a majority vote to require two-thirds vote of the body. Other changes made last night centered primarily on clarification of terms.

If approved by the council at Friday night's special meeting, the charter will be sent immediately to the General Assembly, now in session in Richmond, where it must go through both Houses before becoming effective.

Little Hope Held

Florida Girl Has Surgery For Tumor

Ten-year-old Margaret Ann Jackson of St. Petersburg, Fla., flown here by an Air Force "mercy mission," underwent three-and-a-half hours of brain surgery yesterday in an attempt to save her life, imperiled by a brain tumor.

Dr. Robert Hottel of Washington, who is supervising the case at Sibley Memorial Hospital, said the tumor was "only partly removed." He held out little hope for the child's recovery.

Dr. Arthur Morris, Washington surgeon, began the operation at 3:30 p. m. and his patient was taken from the operating room at 7 p. m.

Dr. Hottel said the tumor was not removed completely "because it was not accessible."

X-Ray Treatments

A surgeon disclosed last night tht X-ray treaments may be used to supplement the operation. A preoperation X-ray was taken at 1 p. m., he said, by a process known as "ventriculography," wherein brain fluid is removed and air is introduced to replace it.

He also said that it would take four to five days before specimens of the tumor can be analyzed to determine positively Margaret Ann's chances for life.

Margaret Ann, daughter of a St. Petersburg machinist, was flown here Sunday by the Air Force. Commercial planes were grounded because of bad weather.

The girl's aunt, Mrs. Elton Davis of 723 Kearney st. nw., said the child felt well until a week ago yesterday.

Bothered by Headaches

Then, complaining of headaches, the girl was taken to a hospital, where the tumor diagnosis was tenatively made last Tuesday. Mrs. Davis made arrangements for the child to come to Washington.

Margaret Ann was examined immediately on her arrival by Dr. Morris, past president of the American Neurological Society, and Dr. Walter Freeman, president of the District Medical Society.

Neighbors Join In Chase, Capture Of Theft Suspect

Two enraged car owners chased a man they spotted breaking into an automobile yesterday for more than three miles, fought a rock-throwing battle with him and finally turned him over to police.

James C. Deaver, 29, of 6928 Maple st. nw., told police he saw the man breaking into his neighbor's car. He alerted the neighbor, Robert T. Turner, 26, of 6931 Maple st. and the chase began.

At 3d and Van Buren sts. nw., Turner cornered his quarry and Deaver who had stopped to call police came up with reinforcements. The auto-breaker gave his name to police as Leonard W. Stewart, 24, and his address at 504 M st. nw. (Residents at that address said he did not live there.) He was charged with destroying private property and petty larceny.

Congress Told Of Plan to Cut Plane Traffic

The Department of Defense plans to divert much of the military and naval air traffic from the vicinity of National Airport to Andrews and Patuxent fields, Congress was told yesterday.

The proximity of Bolling and Anacostia fields to National Airport "creates a traffic control problem," Air Force Col. Norman C. Spencer, told the Senate Commerce Committee. "But," Colonel Spencer added, "it is believed this problem is not insurmountable."

The agreement to move military traffic to Andrews and Patuxent was made several years ago, Spencer said. "However," he said, "the amount diverted to Andrews has been limited by lack of radar equipment and adequate holding points and air-space in the vicinity of Andrews."

Recently he said, modern radar equipment has been delivered and should be in operation soon.

Spencer emphatically denied the congestion was such as to require the closing of the Air Force base at Bolling or the Naval Air base at Anacostia. Although classifying Washington as a "congested area," Spencer declared "we don't believe the density is such that it cannot be handled safely."

Referring to last fall's crash at National Airport—with the greatest fatality list on record—and a reported near-miss between a plane carrying Vice President Alben W. Barkley shortly afterwards, Senator Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.), asked if the congestion from the nearby Defense Department fields was in any way to blame. Spencer said there was no record where such congestion had anything to do with any accidents.

Amendment On Bond Votes Wins Backing

Almost unanimous approval for the Montgomery County Council's proposed amendment to the State law governing bond authorization and issue by counties was expressed by 25 persons who turned out in Rockville last night despite the rain.

The bill would eliminate the provisions requiring mandatory referendum on all bond issues and would exclude certain types of bonds from the aggregate debt limitations of 10 percent of the county's assessed valuation.

The only dissenting voice was raised by William O. King, farmer and carpenter of Woodfield, at the hearing in the courthouse, conducted by the county's delegation to the General Assembly.

Indorsing the measure was Frederic P. Lee, president of the county council; Mrs. Durward V. Sandifer, president of the Board of Education, and James J. Hayden and Allen H. Gardner, members of a county charter committee.

Explaining the amendment, Lee emphasized that it would in no way remove the right given citizens by the council to petition for a referendum on any bond authorization.

The council president said that issuance of $1,220,000 in bonds is being held up, pending action on the proposed bill. He estimated cost of a referendum at $15,000.

Pedestrian Hit by Auto Dies; Sixth D. C. Fatality

Man, 58, Struck Late Saturday; Woman Hurt on Bladensburg Rd.

District traffic deaths this year . . 6
Deaths this date last year . . . 5
Total traffic deaths, 1949 71

Milton W. Johnson, 58, of 1730½ 7th st. nw., died yesterday afternoon at Freedmen's Hospital, the District's sixth traffic fatality of the year.

He was struck at 11:25 p. m. Saturday, at 9th and S sts. nw., police said, by an auto driven by Lloyd F. Hart, 30, of 1433 New Jersey ave. nw.

When taken to the hospital, he was reported suffering from a compound fracture of the right leg, fractured pelvis, and a laceration of the scalp. An autopsy will take place today to determine the exact cause of death, and a coroner's inquest will be held at a date to be set.

At the time of the accident, Hart was arrested and charged with failing to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian. In Municipal Court yesterday morning, Judge George Neilson continued the case on that charge to March 27. He was released on $500 bond.

In another traffic accident yesterday, Mrs. Ruth Smith, 46, suffered a fractured right leg, back and head injuries. She was taken to Prince Georges General Hospital, at Cheverly, by the Brentwood Rescue Squad, from the 3700 block of Bladensburg rd., in Colmar Manor, where the accident occurred. She was reported in serious condition.

Mrs. Smith is the wife of Jack W. Smith, a dispatcher in the Prince Georges County fire control center at Hyattsville. They live at 3704 Monroe st., Colmar Manor, and she is employed by the Prince Georges County Health Department.

Police said she was crossing Bladensburg rd. when struck by an auto driven by James E. Jackson, 45, of 1414 11th st. nw. He was charged with reckless driving and released in $500 bond. His case will come up for hearing in Hyattsville Police Court on March 16.

Mrs. Anne Seeley, 28, of 3011 T st. nw., suffered cuts and head injuries when an auto in which she rode collided about 5 p. m., with another one at the south end of Chain Bridge. She was taken to Georgetown University Hospital for treatment.

Arlington police said the auto in which she rode was driven by Mrs. Jane West, 25, of 4301 Chesterbrook rd., Falls Church, and the other by Claude E. Pistole, 21, of McLean, Va. Pistole was held by Arlington police on a reckless driving charge.

Two Drivers Held In Negligent Homicide

In an unusual action here, a coroner's jury yesterday ordered drivers of two vehicles held on charges of negligent homicide in a traffic death.

The inquest was into the death of Charles Jackson, 777 Kenyon st. nw., who died Friday in an accident at Sherman ave., and Kenyon st. nw., the District's fifth traffic victim of the year.

Police said Jackson had just hailed a cab driven by Evans W. Black, 40, of 1767 Swann st. nw., when the cab was in collision with a Pepco truck driven by Paul J. Barrett, 18, of 5000 4th st. nw. The truck, police said, crashed into two trees, then knocked down a light pole alongside Jackson.

At the inquest yesterday, Mrs. Lillie M. Lawyer, 623 Quebec pl. nw., testified she saw the truck strike Jackson, and saw his body hurled in the air.

The coroner's jury recommended that both Barrett and Black be held on the negligent homicide charges for action in Municipal Court today. The men were released in $1000 bond each for their appearances.

Virginia's Black-eyed Peas Get Day on Capitol Hill

At 1 p. m. today Round Two of the "Battle of the Pea" will break out on Capitol Hill.

The issue: Do you like your black-eyed peas raised in the rich earth of Virginia, or do you like them raised in the rich earth of Texas?

Senator Willis A. Robertson (D., Va.), strictly a Commonwealth pea man, announced yesterday he will demonstrate to his Senate colleague—particularly Lone Star State Congressmen—the "obvious superiority" of Virginia peas over the Texan variety.

The "taste" contest will take place in the Senate restaurant and Senator Robertson has invited as special guests Senators Tom Connally and Lyndon Johnson and Representative Lindley Beckworth, all Texas Democrats.

It all began on January 19, when Beckworth served in the same restaurant the Texas variety of peas. Contestants on both sides serve them as vegetables, accompanying meals. In soup—that's another matter.

Senator Robertson thinks he's on firm ground:

"I shall ask my Texas colleagues to pass fair and impartial judgment on what are the best black-eyed peas produced in the world. I hope my Texas friends will not think I am taking unfair advantage of the Texas growers if I slip a little Smithfield-cured hog jowl in with the peas served to the judges."

Mrs. Barkley Passes District Driving Test With 100 Score

One of the few scores of 100 in the written test for a District driver license was chalked up here yesterday by a girl from St. Louis. Furthermore, she said, she did it without studying.

Now, she has a District permit to drive a convertible which her husband gave her shortly before their marriage last November.

The girl from St. Louis listed herself as Jane R. Barkley, 38; five feet, four inches tall; weight, 135 pounds. Otherwise, she is the wife of Vice-President Barkley.

Mrs. Barkley said she had been driving since she was 16.

"I've been a very careful driver. After all, when you've driven 22 years, you know about the regulations."

Alcatraz Alumnus Sentenced To 360 Days on Gun Charge

Elzear Howder, 44, a former Alcatraz inmate, was sentenced here yesterday to 360 days in jail for carrying a deadly weapon and held under $15,000 bond for grand jury action on robbery charges.

Howder's woes started Sunday morning, when a sugar bowl was broken over his head during a fight with another man in a restaurant at 1555 Pennsylvania ave. southeast.

A policeman, Pvt. Charles A. Scott, of the Tenth Precinct, had stopped in the restaurant for breakfast and broke up a fight, only to learn from the sugar bowl wielder that Howder was carrying a gun and had robbed him. Then the other man fled as Scott searched Howder and found a loaded .45-caliber automatic in his belt.

Yesterday, the sugar bowl wielder appeared at police headquarters after reading of Howder's arrest.

He identified himself as Peyton Manuel, 52, a cab driver, of 116 N. Carolina ave. se. He told police Howder had engaged his cab early Sunday morning, then had robbed him of $7. Later, Howder had forced him to go along into the restaurant, Manuel said.

To make matters worse for Howder, another cab driver, Henry C. Gasque, 35, of 413 Newcomb st. se., appeared at headquarters yesterday and identified Howder as the man who robbed him of $15 and his cab Saturday night. The cab was recovered yesterday after Howder admitted the holdup.

Howder pleaded guilty in Municipal Court to carrying a deadly weapon and was given the maximum sentence by Judge Armond W. Scott. He waived hearing on the robbery charge. Records show he was sentenced to 15 years here for armed robbery in 1932 and served part of his sentence at Alcatraz.

Hearings on Parks Bill Set Wednesday

A House District subcommittee will hold a public hearing at 10:30 a. m. Wednesday on a bill to extend the authority of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission into nearby Maryland and Virginia.

The bill, sponsored by Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) of the House District Committee, is almost identical to a measure that cleared the Senate last fall.

Both bills will come up at the Wednesday hearing, to be conducted by Representative Thomas G. Abernathy (D., Miss.).

Under the long-sought legislation, the planning commission would be enlarged from 10 to 15, of which the Governors of Maryland and Virginia each would name one citizen representative. Of the other three additions, the President would have another appointee (he presently names 4 of the 10 members), the commissioners would appoint one and the architect of the Capital would become a member.

President Truman gave specific indorsement of the measure in his recent budget message to Congress. He said "the Commission should be established on a stronger statutory basis" so it could "fulfill more effectively its obligation to plan the orderly co-ordinated development of the District of Columbia and nearby areas in Maryland and Virginia."

Both states have approved the bill.

Chairman McMillan last night said he hopes hearings will proceed rapidly, pointing out the NCPPC bill might receive full committee approval at the session's first meeting, set for next Monday.

Folk Songs Live Again At Lisner

By Paul Hume

Folk songs out of the past came to life in Lisner Auditorium last night.

Duquesne University sent its unique dancing, singing group, the Tamburitzans in music from what we know today as Yugoslavia. Songs and dances came from three of the peoples that make up that land: Serbs, Croats and Slovenes.

Each of these people has its characteristic qualities. There is a mingling of European and Oriental strains in their folk music. Their instruments, fretted and strung, with bass viols and accordions to lend solidity, sound like gypsies, or like the quiet murmur of bowed instruments.

Versatile Group

The college show brought a versatile ensemble to Lisner. From the same 24 participants, came dancing groups, a mixed chorus, and fine soloists. Of these, Rudolph Zlody and Frances Adler showed off beautiful voices.

Matt Gouze directed the program which moved smoothly through many moods and colors in a wide range of music. It is the old story of genuine folk music: its simplicity is so apparent that nothing can hide its direct appeal to the heart and the emotions.

Music Teachers' Concert

In the afternoon the Washington Music Teachers Association heard Rilla Rowe Mervine, mezzo-soprano and the Rev. Russell Woollen, in a program of songs.

Throughout five songs of Brahms and an excellent group of American songs, the singer displayed a remarkably handsome voice well controlled. Two songs of Samuel Barber from chamber music texts by James Joyce were well done, though there is more to the first of these than was heard.

"Love in the Dictionary" needs more facial vitality to match its bright lines. It suits Mrs. Mervine's voice like a glove.

Her account of Woollen's "Elysium" was a dream of tone and words. His songs are tailor-made for artist-singers. Wealth, the last of these, is a fascinating folk motif in an art form, and a catching melody. His playing is as fine as his music.

Alexandria Man Held Not Involved In Maryland Fire

Ferndale, Md., Jan. 30 (AP).—Police Chief John H. Souers of Anne Arundel County said today a man held for investigation here had nothing to do with a fire that claimed four lives last week.

Souers said he is satisfied that William M. Cooper of Alexandria, Va., was not connected with the Glen Burnie blaze.

Four small children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hartenstein suffocated in the fire. The man was arrested Thursday when he appeared to evince unusual interest in the tragedy. Relatives of the dead children tipped off police.

Found on his person were newspaper clippings describing the fire as well as sex crimes in the Washington area. Washington police said the man was apparently not wanted here.

Charles Cary, Milk Expert, Retires Today

Charles A. Cary, one of the Nation's pioneers in dairy nutrition research, will retire today after 32 years with the Department of Agriculture.

Cary

Cary, head of the Division of Nutrition and Physiology, and his associates recently demonstrated that the unidentified nutrient X which they had previously found in milk and milk products was the newly discovered vitamin B-12.

Cary, who became 70 on January 24, conducted and directed fundamental research on chemical, biochemical and physiological problems relating to milk secretion, the nutrition of dairy cows and the nutritive value of milk and milk products during his tenure.

He began his Government career in 1917 in the Dairy Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry

Mrs. Davis Leaving Department of State

Mrs. Kathryn M. Davis, chief of the confidential files in the European section of the division of communications and records, will retire from the Department of State today after 32 years in Government service.

Before coming to the department 24 years ago, Mrs. Davis was with both the War and Agriculture Departments. A native of Harrisburg, Pa., she moved to Washington at an early age, graduating from both Business High School and Woods Commercial School before entering the Government. She lives at 2701 Connecticut ave. nw., with a daughter, Mrs. Kathryn Atkinson.

Four VA Staffers Retire From Service

Four Veterans Administration employees, each with more than 30 years service, will retire at the close of business today.

They are: Dr. Marshall M. MacLain, of 2141 I st. nw., medical member in the Veterans Claims Service, with 30 years and three months service; Mrs. Maytie W. Wardles of 2405 No.th Madison st., Arlington, adjudicator in the Dependents and Beneficiaries Claims Service, with 32 years service.

Mrs. Minerva M. Snell, of 1575 44th st. nw., benefit payment roll supervisor in the Payee Accounts Service, with 34 years and three months service; and Mrs. Janet G. Lynn, of 622 Lexington pl. ne., mail and file clerk in the Payee Accounts Service, with 31 years and 9 months service.

School Name Plan Rejected In Suitland

Objection to naming the new high school at Suitland, Md., after "any past superintendent of schools" has been voted by the Suitland Businessmen's Association, Inc.

Marion E. West, president of the association, informed Superintendent of Schools G. Gardner Shugart by letter yesterday that use of the name "Suitland High School" is favored by the group.

The Board of Education had selected the name of the late Eugene S. Burroughs for the school. Burroughs was a principal at Suitland High School, an assistant county school examiner and later superintendent of county schools.

Shugart said the new high schools and many of the elementary schools serve more than one community and that naming the schools after past officials prevents sectional jealousies. This was the only objection to the naming program, he said.

The Suitland High School is expected to be ready for classes in the fall of 1951 and will serve approximately 1500 students from the general area. It will be on Silver Hill rd. midway between the Marlboro pike and Suitland rd.

E. M. Warner Elected by Restaurateurs

Edward M. Warner, owner of the Tastee Diners, was elected president of the Washington Restaurant Association last night, succeeding Loftin S. Wesley, owner of Wesley Hall, 1426 21st st. nw.

Warner

Other officers named at the annual meeting in the Washington Gas Light Co. auditorium, 11th and H sts. nw., were Alfred A. McGarraghy, Sholl's Cafeteria, 511 14th st. nw., first vice president; Bayard D. Evans, Evans Coffee Shop, 4770 Lee hwy., Arlington, second vice president; and John Daniels, of the Hot Shoppes, Inc., treasurer.

Robert J. Wilson, executive secretary, and John S. Cockrell, editor of the Restaurateur, will continue in their present positions, as will Ringgold Hart, general counsel, and Vinton E. Lee, auditor and accountant, it was announced.

Mrs. Marion O'Donnell of Garfinckel's and Robert Ayers of Government Services, Inc., were elected directors.

Pope Pius Names D. C. Churchman An Archbishop

A Washington churchman has been elevated by Pope Pius XII to be an archbishop and appointed apostolic nuncio to Colombia, it was announced yesterday.

He is The Most Rev. Antonio Samore, counselor to the apostolic delegation in Washington since April, 1927. The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate here, announced the elevation. No date or place has yet been announced for consecration ceremonies. The new nuncio will be consecrated Titular Archbishop of Ternobus.

Born in Italy in 1905, Bishop Samore was ordained in 1928. After postgraduate study, he served as curate in Italy, at the Vatican, and with apostolic delegations in Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, and Switzerland.

Barron Reports On Candidate for Sesqui Fair Post

An "eminently qualified" general manager for the Sesqui's Freedom Fair has been found, Carter T. Barron, Sesqui executive vice chairman, said last night.

He said the name would be presented to an executive committee meeting, scheduled for 3 p. m. Wednesday. He would only add that the man was from out of town and not in Government service. He will have to win the approval of the full commission as well, Barron added, to be named to the post.

Meanwhile, National Capital Parks announced bids are soon to be taken for concerts and other work at the Rock Creek Park amphitheater.

Bids for the parking area will be opened February 9, for the main seating bowl February 15 and for the stage soon after that.

Phone Book Ad Income Ruled Taxable

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. must pay District gross receipt taxes on income from its classified directory advertising, the United States Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

In an opinion written by Judge David L. Bazelon, the court reversed the Board of Tax Appeals. It did not disturb several other rulings on phone company taxes, however.

The company contended the tax law did not cover the advertising revenue because it places the tax on receipts "from the sale of public utility commodities and services."

The tax board agreed, holding that while such advertising was "closely associated" with the company's services like peanuts and popcorn at a baseball game it was not "essential" to it.

Bazelon, however, said that while the company need not sell advertising it did so with recognition "that its economic self-interest is well served by doing so. Once having embarked upon such a course, it must assume the obligations which attend the benefits."

Suspect in Houseboat Attack Held for Jury

Joseph B. Vines, 40, of 435 N st. nw., yesterday was ordered held under $10,000 bond for grand jury action on a charge of assault with intent to commit rape.

Victim of the attack, Mrs. Jeannie Williams, 35, who lives on a cabin cruiser docked at the Gregory boatyard, 820 Maine ave. sw., identified him positively from the stand in Municipal Court as the man who assaulted her on the boat last Thursday.

Appeals Court Rules Wham May Sue U. S. for Injuries

Because an injured policeman draws benefits from the Police and Firemen's Relief Fund does not prevent him from suing the United States when one of its employes is involved, the United States Court of Appeals held yesterday.

The opinion, by Judge James M. Proctor, was in the case of Motorcycle Patrolman Valdeau B. Wham, 3871 Alabama ave. se. He was injured in an accident involving a Treasury Department truck.

District Court had ruled that since Wham was able to draw compensation from the police and firemen's fund, he could not also sue the Government. It construed the Tort Claims Act, which permits such suits, to that effect.

But the Appeals Court yesterday reversed the lower court, declaring there was nothing in the claims act indicating any such exemption.

Judge Proctor took pains to knock down a Government contention that since the Federal Government paid 40 percent of the cost of the welfare fund, it would be in effect twice contributing to the injured policeman.

Proctor said the Government long since gave up the 40 percent contribution idea for a lump sum payment to the District.

D. C. Hotels Inspected by Europeans

What was it you found lacking in hotel service when you were last abroad? No ice water? Lack of closets? No bathtub?

Washington is playing host to 17 foreign hotelmen who are observing American methods and techniques to improve efficiency and, perhaps, attract a few more visitors.

Managers of leading hotels, travel associations and hotel organizations in England, Ireland, Scotland, Turkey, Belgium and the Netherlands are here under the Foreign Assistance Act of the Marshall Plan.

Striking to most is the standardization in American hotels. Whether it be furniture, food or service, the group seems amazed at the streamlining, but are also aware of what is sacrificed.

They toured the Statler yesterday, were awed by the efficient kitchen, amazed at the laundry. But the hotel's showpiece, the presidential suite, where nothing was spared in ornateness and splendor, left something to be desired. One hotelman noted the bathtub was still the ordinary 4-feet 6-inch model and not the 6-feet-2 variety found on the Continent.

The visiting hotelmen thought they could benefit from technical assistance, such as production, business management methods and statistical analysis, but thought they had drawing cards of their own, like 6-feet-2 tubs.

Prior to arrival here, the party toured hotels and motor courts in New York, Richmond and Williamsburg. They are stopping at the Raleigh Hotel and will leave today for Harrisburg, Pa.

Hill Hearing Set For Wednesday on Baltimore Road

A bill to expedite completion of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway will have a hearing at 10 a. m. Wednesday before the full Public Works Committee.

Representative George Fallon (D., Md.), sparkplug of the roadway legislation, will preside. Robert M. Rheindollar, chairman of the Maryland Roads Commission, and William W. Wurster, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, will head the list of witnesses.

The legislation would transfer to the National Park Service the job of completing the parkway from Fort Meade to the District line.

Man Fires at Rat, Bullet Kills Wife On Floor Below

Farmington, Del., Jan. 30 (AP).—A rat which frightened Mrs. Elizabeth Jerread, 17, and Mrs. Jeanette Fisher, in the Fisher home, cost Mrs. Jerread her life yesterday.

The women called the latter's husband, William, 23, after fleeing from the second to the first floor. State police said Jerread took a pistol, went to the second floor, and fired at the rat.

The bullet tore through the ceiling of the living room and struck Mrs. Jerread in the abdomen. She died a few moments later.

Sullivan May Enter Race Against Tobey

John L. Sullivan, former Secretary of the Navy, called at the White House yesterday.

Democratic leaders in New Hampshire are reported as eager to have Sullivan run this fall for the seat now held by Senator Charles Tobey, a Republican. Sullivan told reporters he was going to Manchester, N. H., over the weekend, and added that any announcement he had to make would come from there.

The former Navy head said he called on President Truman to discuss plans for Brotherhood Week, February 19-26, being sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Truman Asks Funds For Palestine Refugees

President Truman yesterday asked Congress to appropriate $27,450,000 to help Palestine refugees in the Near East through the United Nations. That would be half the expenses for an 18-month program. Other countries would put up the remainder.

Mr. Truman made his bid for congressional action in letters to Vice President Barkley and Speaker Rayburn.

The relief job would be handled by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, created by the U. N. General Assembly to deal with the problem raised by the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people by war in Palestine.

School Official Killed, Second Injured in Crash

Lynchburg, Jan. 30 (AP).—Peter Rodgers Brown, 26, dean of the school of religion of Virginia Seminary and College here, was killed instantly and the school's dean of men, John W. Holmes, was injured critically in a wreck early today on Route 460 near Burkeville.

James Kane Dies; D. C. Architect

Graveside services for James Allen Kane, Washington architect who helped design the McLean Apartments and the Treasury Department annex, will be held Wednesday at 2 p. m. at the Chestnut Grove Presbyterian Church Cemetery at Sweet Air, Md., near Baltimore.

Mr. Kane died Sunday night after an illness of two months. He was 65. His body will be at the Pumphrey funeral home, 7557 Wisconsin ave., Bethesda, from 3 to 8 p. m. today.

As a designer for the old Parker Thomas and Rice architectural firm in Boston, he helped draw the plans for the present Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. He also designed the Detroit Athletic Club in 1913.

Before coming here in 1942 to work on the McLean Gardens project, he designed numerous buildings such as banks, office buildings and city halls.

The architect, who lived at the Alban Towers, 3700 Massachusetts ave. nw., was born near Baltimore. He studied architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and did graduate work there following his graduation. He also studied in France and Italy before joining the Boston firm.

In 1940 he published "The Ancient Building Science," a book on which he spent 30 years of research.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Donna C. Kane, and a sister, Miss Frances Kane, who lives near Baltimore.

Cold, Rain, Sleet Top Forecaster's Weather Menu

Stand by for more weather today like that of yesterday, only a bit colder and nastier.

So says the Government weather forecaster with a prediction that the mercury's long and consistent skid from a high of 59 at 4:40 a. m., yesterday, will continue down to the freezing point early today.

Also, stand by, he says, for more rain, and some sleet mixed in it early today. The sleet, he thinks, won't be a real menace, but will be present. And the high for today? Only in the upper 30's. "Cloudy and cold, with occasional rain, probable sleet early today." That's the menu, like it or not.

Dean Brown to Speak At Meeting on Genocide

Dean Brendan F. Brown of the Catholic University Law School has been added to the roster of speakers at a public meeting Wednesday to urge Senate ratification of the Genocide Convention as passed by the United Nations.

Other speakers will be Senator Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Genocide; Adrian S. Fisher, State Department legal adviser, and Dr. Rafael Lemkin of Yale University, founder of the World Movement to Outlaw Genocide. The meeting will be held at 8 p. m. in the Interior Auditorium, between 18th and C sts.

Fraternity Bars Banned at W. & L.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—There'll be no more bars in Washington and Lee University fraternity houses.

At least that's what a university official has told the W. & L. Interfraternity Council, a group of student representatives that govern fraternities on the campus.

An old university regulation forbidding bars in fraternity houses has been resurrected and will be "strictly enforced," the official told the IFC.

Suit Against Liquor Dealer Dismissed

Judge Matthew F. McGuire of District Court yesterday dismissed a suit brought to set aside the issuance of a Class A liquor license to Alex Browdy at 1918 Allison st. ne.

The suit had been brought by a number of residents of the area who claimed the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board acted improvidently in issuing the license last March. Browdy was represented by Attorney Milford F. Schwartz.

Cameramen to Organize

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—A committee of five members will meet in Williamsburg February 5 to draft a constitution for a new organization, the Virginia Press Photographers' Association, which is scheduled to be formed at a session here March 5.

Rites Today For A. L. Key, Retired Officer

Funeral services for Commodore Albert Lenoir Key, 90, U.S.N. ret., a Naval aide to President Theodore Roosevelt and one of the oldest graduates of the Naval Academy, who died Thursday in New York, will be held at 2 p. m. today at Fort Myer Chapel.

Interment with full military honors will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Commodore Key, who graduated from the Naval Academy in 1882, served in the Spanish American War and from 1898 to 1905, was the Naval attache in Tokyo and Peking.

He served as the President's naval aide from 1905 to 1907. His assignments from 1908 to June 30, 1912, when he retired, included those of commanding officer of the cruiser Salem, chief of staff of the Atlantic Fleet and commanding officer of the battleship Texas.

A native of Loudon County, Tenn., Commodore Key in 1898 married the former Miss Grace Condit Smith of Washington, who died some years ago.

For the past several years he lived in New York.

He was a member of the Metropolitan Club and the Army and Navy Club here.

He is survived by a son, David McKendree Key, U. S. counsellor of embassy at Rio de Janeiro, and three grandchildren.

Ben H. Darrow

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 30 (AP).—Funeral services will be held here Tuesday for Ben H. Darrow, 60, a pioneer in the use of radio broadcasts for teaching and a member of the University of Maryland faculty before World War I.

He died here Saturday. He was the first full-time YMCA secretary at College Park and during World War I served as a YMCA secretary at Camp Meigs near Washington.

He is survived by his widow, a sister, and four children. The eldest son, Richard W. Darrow, is director of public relations for the Glenn L. Martin Co. in Baltimore.

Michael Francis Hanson

Philadelphia, Jan. 30 (AP).—Michael Francis Hanson, 83, former publisher of the now defunct Philadelphia Record and the Duluth (Minn.) Herald, died today at his suburban Chestnut Hill home.

A native Philadelprian, Hanson entered the newspaper field at the age of 21 with the Record. He retired in 1936, but continued as a member of the advertising and newsprint committees of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Truman Blast Is Used In Mail Fight on FEPC

"The best argument against Mr. Truman's FEPC is his own blast against Drew Pearson—'No S. O. B. is going to tell me who to hire or fire'."

$13 Million Sought for Buildings

Baltimore, Jan. 30 (AP). — The University of Maryland is seeking legislative approval for $13,876,029 worth of new buildings.

Requests for the projects will be submitted to the General Assembly which convenes Wednesday.

Meantime, the blueprint has been transmitted to the State Department of Public Improvements here.

It comprises 58 items divided among the College Park campus, Maryland State College at Princess Anne, and the Baltimore professional schools.

Main expenditures are projected for College Park — $8,125,664. Agricultural facilities totaling $1,731,500 also would be located there under present plans.

Library Tops List

Construction of a general library costing two million dollars is the largest single project scheduled for College Park. Others are:

Three men's dormitories; $750,000; student activities building, $350,000; mathematics and engineering library, $450,000; airport, $750,000; hospital and infirmary, $300,000.

Three women's dormitories, $874,000; laundry and equipment, $150,000; industrial arts building, $195,000; engineering research laboratory, $90,000; physics classrooms and laboratory, $750,000; renovating men's dormitory, $70,000; home economics practice house, $75,000.

$200,000 For Gym

Construction of railroad siding, $40,000; equipment for engineering and chemistry buildings, $288,000; addition to women's gymnasium, $200,000; addition to armory, $95,000; central supply depot, $100,000; garage, $110,000; roads, landscaping, utilities, $175,000; sub-station equipment, $82,525.

Further, the requests for College Park include an item of $231,139 by way of contribution to building of a chapel, intramural playing fields and dressing rooms.

Leading the agricultural project requests are: Livestock exhibition building, $200,000; dairy building, $500,000; land purchases, $250,000; meat laboratory, $150,000.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—Governor Battle's 45 million dollar school grant bill emerged virtually intact today from the House Appropriations Committee.

Howard H. Adams, of Eastville, chairman of the committee, said no matching amendments were offered and there were no votes cast against the Administration proposal to furnish money to the localities for school construction without strings attached.

The House committee took the bill up after it had held a joint public hearing with the Senate Finance Committee. The latter committee did not hold another meeting on the bill today but it is due to get a subcommittee report Tuesday morning on amendments offered by Senator Garland Gray of Waverly.

State Senator Frank S. Richeson of Richmond urged that localities contribute at least 25 percent toward matching State funds.

Unless the localities are required to put up some matching money they won't be so careful as to what sort of schools the State money is spent on, he said.

Earlier, an effort to whittle down the tax increases of 1948 was made in the Senate by bills introduced by Senator E. O. McCue, jr., of Charlottesville.

McCue called the 1948 increases unnecessary and proposed these reductions, among others:

Corporation income tax from 5 percent to 4 percent on taxable net income. Prior to 1948 the rate was 3 percent.

Personal income tax rates to remain the same but a 20 percent reduction on tax bills under $100 and 10 percent on bills over $100.

Hearing Set For Virginia Bill on Rents

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (AP).—A public hearing will be held Thursday at 3 p. m. on a bill to abolish Federal rent controls in Virginia and repeal Virginia's stand-by rent control law.

The bill's patron is Delegate John B. Boatwright, of Buckingham, chairman of the General Laws Committee which will conduct the hearing.

The bill does not have an emergency clause. If passed, it would go into effect about June 25—five days before the present Federal controls are due to expire unless extended.

Discrimination Here Scandalous, Bunche Declares

New York, Jan. 30 (AP).—Ralph J. Bunche, former U. N. mediator for Palestine, says in an article in the American magazine that racial discrimination in Washington, D. C., is scandalous. Bunche is an American Negro.

"If I visit Washington today I can't buy a meal, order a drink, see a movie, or, with very few exceptions, rent a hotel room, except in the Negro section of town," Bunche wrote in the article made public tonight.

After winding up his job in Palestine, Bunche last year turned down an offer to become an assistant U. S. Secretary of State in favor of remaining in his U. N. post as top-ranking director of the U. N. trusteeship department.

One report was that he did not want to return to Washington, because of racial conditions there.

Bill Would Pay Woman $15,000 For Blast Injury

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—An attractive Arlington (Va.) bride whose face was badly disfigured in a University of Virginia boiler blast, would receive $15,000 relief from the State under terms of a bill introduced in the Virginia Senate today.

She is Mrs. Robert Parrott, student's wife, whose trailer home was destroyed by fire in the university laundry March 21, 1949.

Fenwick Asks Study of Sex Offense Laws

Richmond, Va., Jan. 30 (Spl.).—A commission to study and report on sex offense laws was proposed by Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington, in a joint resolution introduced today in the Virginia Senate.

The commission would consist of 10 members, two of whom would be physicians trained in mental diseases. The resolution would have the commission report to the Legislature by September 1, 1951.

Senator Fenwick also introduced a bill to provide an extra circuit court judge in Arlington County.

Senator Andrew W. Clarke of Fairfax introduced a bill to provide for a referendum in Fairfax County on a proposal for a change to a county manager form of government.

Delegate Armistead Boothe of Alexandria submitted a bill in the House which would allow all the persons in line when the polls close to vote.

Virginia Needs Furniture but U. S. Owns It

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

The State of Virginia wants four pieces of furniture—beg, borrow or outright gift. It officially said so yesterday through its Senate and House of Delegates.

The Smithsonian Institution owns all four pieces. Owns them, the Institution asserted yesterday, with legally binding stipulations not to let them out of its possession.

The Congress of the United States is in the middle.

The furniture—two chairs, one table, one desk—isn't ordinary stuff; it's part of the fabric of history. General Grant sat on one chair, General Lee on the other in that house at Appomattox Court House when Lee surrendered to Grant.

One of the tables, a pine affair, was the one on which Grant wrote the surrender conditions. Nobody is quite sure what part the fourth piece played that day of April 9, 1865, but it was there in the room—a mammoth, Victorian secretary-desk.

Virginia Senator Charles T. Moses introduced a joint-resolution—passed in one day—asking for the furniture's return. It was addressed not only to the Smithsonian, but to Congress—particularly Congress, said Moses.

The famed Appomattox house—the McLean Mansion—has been rebuilt by the National Park Service. It will be dedicated sometime this April. Moses would like the furniture there that day, and forever after.

"If it belongs any place," he said, "it belongs there."

To the contrary, said Dr. A. Remington Kellogg, director of Smithsonian's National Museum, owners of the furniture.

Four separate people—from Civil War General Blackmar to General Custer's wife—gave it to the institution.

"In each case," Dr. Kellogg said after a search of files, "the stipulation of the gift or bequest is that it remain with the Smithsonian."

At any rate, the four pieces—two chairs, one table, one desk—are in the north hall of the Arts and Industries Building, nicely displayed in a "half-room" setting that simulates things as they were that day in 1865.

Meantime—

Dr. Kellogg: "I'm no lawyer, but if you made a will with a stipulation like that, what would you expect?"

Senator Moses: "We've asked Congress to help us. We've 'memorialized' Congress. We have two Senators and a number of Representatives there.

"We want that furniture!"

Zoo Probes Mystery Of Missing Rare Birds

London, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—An armed guard patrolled the London Zoo today in an effort to solve the mystery of 15 missing rare birds.

The birds have disappeared during the last six weeks. Four Egyptian geese were found missing yesterday morning. The night before a peregrine falcon disappeared from his cage, which had been cut with a sharp instrument.

One zookeeper said the geese might have been stolen by ration-weary Britons. Another said a hungry fox or dog could have eaten the birds.

Married 38 Years, Couple Were Happy Together Until This Last Year; Now Wife Treats Husband Coldly and Dwells on Admiration for Bus Driver

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My wife and I have been married 38 years and both of us are past 50 years of age. We were happy together until this last year, but nowadays my wife just doesn't seem the same.

A passenger bus goes by our home and my wife often rides on it, and she has fallen in love with the driver. She wants to tell me about him all the time, and even when she isn't taking the bus she goes out front to watch for it, just so she can wave to the driver. When I try to reason with her, she says if she likes that driver it is nobody's business.

When I come home she treats me very coldly and often will leave the room. I try to be nice to her but she cuts me off so short. I just don't know what to say to her any more. I tell her she is in a nervous condition—and she says I am crazy.

Husband's Hurt, but Not Jealous

I TOOK IT upon myself to talk to the bus driver, but I haven't admitted this to my wife yet, because I know she would be angry. He said he is very sorry if my wife is smitten with him, and that he has never given her any attention, except to answer when she speaks to him. He said he has a darling wife and isn't interested in anyone else; and he wishes my wife would stop riding his bus.

He said if there is no empty seat close to him when she rides the bus, she stands by him to make conversation, which is a bother and very embarrassing to him. He said he asked her once please not to bother, but she just kept on pestering him. Should I tell her what he said? Or what should I do? I feel like giving up. I am not jealous; I am just hurt and disgusted. I think my wife reads your column—so please print this letter and your advice at once. J. B.

Wife Is Acting Out a Fantasy

DEAR J. B.: I confess to a fleeting doubt as to whether you really did talk to the bus driver about your wife's crush on him. As I go over the list of unflattering things he is alleged to have said about her, it occurs to me that you may have made up that part of the letter, in the hope that it would be good medicine for her if she happened to read it,—a kind of shock-cure of her futile infatuation.

However, even if you didn't have such a talk with the driver, I am sure your version of his gloomy reactions is a shrewd description of how he (or the average man in his occupation) would feel about an elderly housewife who seemed to be trying to coquette with him,—because after all the average bus driver is fairly young as compared to your wife, and not looking for a sweetie in the grandma-age class.

Now and again the operators of bus companies are fortunate to find "all around" first-rate drivers—men who are expert motorists in heavy traffic, and also courteous to customers, including pests and crackpots; and perhaps your wife's "hero" is such a fellow. And astonishing though it may seem to you, it isn't uncommon for lonely, socially isolated women along a good driver's route to take a shine to him and weave fantasies of being loved by him, and look forward to a glance or a few words from him as the high spot of their day.

Doctor's Advice Should Be Sought

Once in a while I get letters in that vein, mostly from young girls who need friends and hunger for love, and who, due to the emptiness of their days, have imaginatively "fixed" on some bus driver as their supposed affinity, simply because he seems nice, recognizes them as a regular rider and greets them pleasantly as they pass. Instead of realizing that their problem is loneliness, they mistakenly read personal significance into the man's affable courtesy (which he sheds on all), and wistfully wonder how to get really close to him.

It seems your wife is involved in that kind of day dreaming, and consequently is as blind to the driver's remoteness from her real life as she is deaf to your expostulations. Since she is behaving like a daft adolescent, it occurs to me that she may be veering towards second childhood—suffering a decline in mental health, and regrettable loss of emotional control, that may be due, say, to hardening of the arteries or habitual neurotic tension, increasing in severity with age. So my advice is to get first-rate medical attention for her, to fathom the meaning of her "change," ease her symptoms if possible, and give you help in coping sensibly if her peculiarities continue. German Women to Join World Prayer Day

By Genevieve Reynolds

FOR THE first time since 1933, German women will participate openly in a World Day of Prayer on February 24. So reported Mrs. Nold Liselotte of Nuremburg, guest speaker Monday at the annual meeting of the Washington Council of Church Women held at Hamline Methodist Church, 16th and Allison sts. nw.

Mrs. Liselotte came to this country about two weeks ago from Germany on a cultural exchange program. Her visit here is sponsored by the United Council of Church Women, under whose auspices the World Day of Prayer will be held in all countries.

The speaker pointed out that under Hitler German women were not allowed to observe the World Day of Prayer.

According to Mrs. Liselotte, unemployment is high among women of her country, especially in the Bavarian forest area. Many of these unemployed women, however, make and dress dolls in authentic Bavarian costumes. Church groups market the "Self Help Dolls." This provides a small income for such women.

Mrs. Maybelle Rae Le Grand, editor of The Church of Women, official publication of the United Council of Church Women, was another speaker at the afternoon session. She told the some 300 council representatives that Christian women should lead the way in establishing a world sisterhood of good will.

During the morning session, Mrs. Wallace N. Streeter was re-elected president of the council for a third term. Also reelected were Mrs. W. W. Swett, first vice president, and Mrs. R. J. Jorolemon, treasurer.

New officers elected included Mrs. Clarence T. Nelson, second vice president; Mrs. L. Virginia Quivers, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. A. Hunter Pritchard, assistant treasurer.

A report on the council projects was given by Miss Etta Mai Russell, executive secretary.

Rep. Bolton Asks New Asia Policy

Representative Frances P. Bolton yesterday stressed the need for a new Asia policy in a speech before members of the University Women's Clubs. She said that American policy should be based on the realistic fact that the Asiatic people are emerging toward self-government.

The Ohio Congresswoman predicted that Southern Korea would be granted 60 million dollars in aid when Congress takes a new vote on the question.

According to Mrs. Bolton, the people in Southern Korea have done a good job with ECA aid previously granted. She said that the Koreans can take care of border incidents if the Kremlin leaves them alone.

Turning from world problems to domestic affairs, Representative Bolton urged all women to use their vote. She said that women failed to make their potential political power felt because they are disorganized and don't yet know what they want.

Miss Ethel Johnson, chairman of the club's legislative committee, introduced the speaker. Preceding the program, a reception was held honoring Mrs. Bolton and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon. Heading the receiving line was Dr. Elisabeth Conrad, club president.

Sectional Thinking Hurts U. S. Security, Childs Says

DESPITE the number of able Senators and Representatives in Washington today, it too often happens that the National interest is overlooked, News Analyst Marquis Childs told the National Democratic Woman's Club yesterday.

"We have cattle Senators, dairy Senators, oil Senators and corn and hog Senators," Mr. Childs said, complaining of "narrow sectional interests" which he believes endanger United States security.

Sectionalism leads to false economies in preparing the budget, he said. When too many Congressmen champion appropriations for their own localities, items of national and international importance, such as ECA funds, are trimmed. In this way, America's world position is threatened, according to Mr. Childs.

Mrs. Oscar Chapman, wife of the Secretary of the Interior and program chairman for the club, introduced the speaker. Others at the speaker's table included Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, wife of the Texas Senator; Mrs. Cordell Hull; Mrs. O. Max Gardner; Mrs. Julien Friant, president of the club; Mrs. John Peurifoy, wife of the Deputy Undersecretary of State; Mrs. J. Allen Frear, jr., wife of the Delaware Senator, and Mrs. William Boyle, wife of the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Swim in Good Cheer

Australia Day Feted at Embassy

By Elizabeth Maguire

EVERYBODY in Australia went to the beaches yesterday and had a good swim. That was the traditional way to observe Australia Day, which falls on January 26 and is usually celebrated the following Monday.

Here in Washington, the Ambassador of Australia and Mrs. Makin gave a buffet luncheon for 100 guests on Thursday, January 26, and a reception yesterday for several hundred more.

Welcoming fires glowed in the library and drawing room yesterday, and there were fat bouquets of spring flowers in yellow, pink and white. A buffet in the dining room included fresh fruits, turkeys, ham, shrimp and fluffy mocha cakes.

A number of young matrons at the party were Australian war brides of some five years ago. When Mrs. Makin came to Washington several years ago she had regular teas for these brides, but in time she had to discontinue the teas, as growing families added too many tiny tots to the guest list.

Former Ambassador and Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck were in the gathering, as well as former Ambassador and Mrs. Nelson Johnson and his sister, Miss Betty Johnson. Mrs. Cordell Hull dropped by, had a chat with Mrs. Robert E. Lee 3r. and Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould.

Many others present included Sir Alwyn and Lady Crow, Professor and Mrs. Charles Sawer, Mr. and Mrs. James Martin Souby, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Senator and Mrs. Homer Ferguson, Thomas Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. John Clifford Folger, the First Secretary of the Australian Embassy and Mrs. Owen Davis, and Maj. and Mrs. Gordon Gay.

Australia Day this year marks the 162nd anniversary of the colonization of Australia.

Swedish Cruiser Captain Honored

ON THE occasion of the visit of the Swedish cruiser Gotland, a dinner was given last evening at the Swedish Embassy by the Ambassador and Mme. Boheman. The Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Francis P. Matthews were ranking guests.

Others were the captain of the Gotland, Capt. S. O. Rosenberg, and his aide, Comdr. S. M. G. Hammar. Also the Naval Attache of the embassy and Mme. de Croneborg; the United States Deputy Chief of Naval Operations, Vice Admiral Arthur D. Struble, and Mrs. Struble; the Commandant of the Potomac River Naval Command, Rear Admiral Glenn B. Davis, and Mrs. Davis; the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, and Mrs. Holloway; the Director of Naval Intelligence, Rear Admiral Felix Johnson, and Mrs. Johnson; Chief of Protocol and liaison officer of Naval Intelligence, Capt. Floyd F. Ferris, and Mrs. Ferris; Capt. and Mrs. Robert P. Pirie, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hulley.

Turkish Ambassador Is Dinner Host

THE Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Erkin entertained at a dinner last evening for the Postmaster General and Mrs. Jesse Monroe Donaldson, the Spanish Ambassador-at-Large and Senora de Lequerica, Judge and Mrs. George Neilson and Mr. and Mrs. James Vardaman.

Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Curt C. Schiffeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Miss Rosa Ponselle, Countess de Marenches, Mrs. Gustav Stewart, Miss Elizabeth Howry, George Williams, Behrend Dryber, and the Second Secretary of the Embassy and Mme. Erez.

Turkey's Press Aide Entertains Visitor

WITH an eye to attract the tourist trade, Turkey is building roads and planning accommodations for travelers on a wide scale. Here to confer with American agencies is Dr. Ahmet S. Esmer, director-general of Press, Broadcasting and Tourism Department of the Turkish government. Last night he was guest of honor at a buffet supper given by the Press Attache of the Turkish Embassy and Mme. Nuzhet Baba.

George Wadsworth, American Ambassador to Turkey was among the guests. In the group also were Senator and Mrs. Karl Mundt, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Mrs. Michael McDermott; John D. Jernegan, Director of the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs of the State Department, and Mrs. Jernegan; Mr. and Mrs. Forney Rankin; Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Chartrand, and Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Damon.

Among the guests also were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Edson, who knew Dr. Esmer in Turkey; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, always a friend of Turkey, and Herbert Cummings of the Department of Commerce, who was stationed in Turkey during the war.

Returning Diplomat Gives Farewell Party

VICE ADM. ATTILA MONTEIRO ACHE, retiring Naval Attache of the Brazilian Embassy, and Mme. Ache entertained yesterday at cocktails to say farewell to friends and to introduce their successors, Adm. and Mme. Ernesto Araujo. The party was held in the Burgundy Room of the Wardman Park Hotel, from 6 to 8 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. William Nelson Monies entertained for Admiral and Mme. Ache and their daughter, Miss Yvonne Ache, at cocktails on Sunday. When Mr. and Mrs. Monies were married, two years ago this month, the Aches were members of the wedding party, and their daughter was a bridesmaid. Mrs. Monies is the daughter of the former Brazilian Military Attache, Maj. Gen. Henrique Baptista Duffles Teixiera Lott and Mme. Lott.

Departing Carneys Honored Again

ANOTHER party was given last evening for Adm. and Mrs. Robert B. Carney, who are leaving Washington soon for a Florida vacation and later a new post at Norfolk, Va. A dinner in their honor was given by Mrs. Walter L. Heiberg. In the company were Rear Adm. and Mrs. William Wright, Gen. and Mrs. Harold Bull, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Pasvolsky and the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn.

Minister Announces Daughter's Engagement

AT a musicale and tea on Sunday, the Minister of Austria and Mme. Kleinwaechter announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ebba Kleinwaechter, to the First Secretary of the legation, Dr. Herbert Schober. About 50 guests were assembled in the drawing room. A program of Italian eighteenth century music by Marcello was played on the viola by Paul Hindemith, noted composer and cousin of the Minister. Paul Gallaway, organist at the National Cathedral, accompanied Mr. Hindemith.

No date has been set yet for the forthcoming marriage. The bride-elect was graduated from Albertus Magnus College in New Haven, Conn., in 1948, and later studied chemistry at Johns Hopkins and Catholic University.

Dr. Schober studied at the University of Vienna, and this is his first foreign post. Tyrolean by birth and an excellent skiier, he will accompany the Austrian ski team to Aspen, Col., this month. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolf Schober of Vienna. His father holds a position in the Austrian government corresponding to our Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

In honor of the distinguished Swiss conductor, Ernest Ansermet, the Swiss Minister and Mme. Charles Bruggmann will entertain at the legation following Wednesday's National Symphony concert, at which Mr. Ansermet will make his first Washington appearance as guest conductor.

Romaine Chooses Dove Grey Pink

By Marie McNair

WHEN Mrs. Romaine Pierce Simpson marries the Marquess of Milford Haven, second cousin of Britain's King George, at the National Presbyterian Church on Saturday, she'll wear a Mainbocher-designed gown of dove gray pink.

The American bride-elect and the Marquess, who sells British-made heaters in this country, and runs a launderette chain at home, are due in Washington on Wednesday from New York. Mrs. Simpson will stay with her mother, Mrs. Clark McIlwaine, while the Marquess will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Alfons Landa, the latter the former Consuelo Morgan Thaw.

For the ceremony, which is of international interest, Mrs. Simpson will wear a hat of Renaissance style with hand-pleated miniature lace fans. A taffeta satin bandeau will give the hat a halo effect. Her gown is of tie silk, with street-length slim skirt covered with fine French lace and is typically Mainbocher with push-up sleeves and Peter Pan collar.

When she leaves on her honeymoon the bride will wear a "crushed tomato" colored suit of fine tweed, from Hattie Carnegie, with straight skirt and a two-toned waistcoat of the same color. Her hat of matching shade is a side draped felt and tweed cloche with a brace of flared felt pleats at the side.

King Peter and Queen Alexandra of Yugoslavia, now in New York, have been invited to the wedding.

In addition to royalty, a number of Hollywood friends of the young Marquess are expected to attend.

Elizabeth Arden Predicts Shorter Skirts for Spring

THE ever-youthful Elizabeth Arden Graham raised the skirt of her smart black frock an inch or two and said "My spring skirts will be about here." The beauty expert was guest of honor at a ladies' tea yesterday given by Mme. Dendramis, wife of the Greek Ambassador.

Arden spring fashions, designed by Castillo, will be shown at the benefit fashion luncheon for Providence Hospital at the Mayflower today.

Yesterday about 50 friends of Mme. Dendramis clustered about the blond beauty expert who also has a breeding farm in Lexington, Ky., and races some of the finest horses on the tracks.

Miss Arden's frock was intricately draped in front and a huge diamond was held by a strand of pearls which went twice about her throat. Her hat was a black calot.

The hostess, one of Washington's "best dressed," was in black bengaline made with wide pointed revers and flared skirt.

Miss Arden dined with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert last night and she was a luncheon guest yesterday of the Secretary of the Senate and Mrs. Leslie Biffle in Mr. Biffle's private dining room at the Capitol.

Vice President and Mrs. Barkley were in the company and others were the Belgian Ambassador, Baron Robert Silvercruys, Senator and Mrs. Brien McMahon, Senator Margaret Chase Smith, Senator William Benton, Senator Richard B. Russell, jr., Senator Millard Tydings, Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark, Treasurer of the United States; the Secretary of the Air Force and Mrs. Stuart Symington, Undersecretary of Commerce and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Robert, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gardner, Mrs. James Russell Lowell, here with Miss Arden from New York, and Earle Stewart, also of New York.

About Bedroom Color Scheme

Could you suggest what color swags or draperies, throw rugs and lamps would be suitable for a mauve-colored bedroom which will have either dark walnut or dark mahogany furniture?
M. C. N.

Since mauve is a neutral shade, many colors are pretty with it. With the dark furniture, it would probably be a good idea to choose draperies, rugs and lamps that would lighten the room. You might, for instance, have light green drapes and/or swags and a deeper green rug. Tones of mauve, violet and green could be further carried out in cushions, slip covers for an easy chair, perhaps, in a foral print in these tones. For accent, you might have a bright rose cushion or two, lamps, or vases. Don't overdo the accent tone, though. Have just enough of it to point up the restful shades.

I am planning an air trip to the Mardi Gras February 18. What type of clothing would be suitable for such a trip? N. C.

"Spring" clothes would be most appropriate for the New Orleans visit—printed silk dresses, a light coat, suit, and spring hat, for instance. However, could be that the fur coat will come in handy, too. A native of New Orleans tells me that it often turns distressingly cold for the gala week.

She says, too, that if you want to wear your winter hat, dresses, and accessories you won't be embarrassed, because about half the women you meet on the street at that time will be wearing winter clothes and half of them spring clothes. She urges that you take along a particularly comfortable pair of shoes as a good deal of walking is involved in seeing the parades and enjoying all the sights.

I notice that quite a few people write in for advice as to what clothes to wear on trips to various parts of the country. About two years ago, I was beset with the problem of what to wear in San Francisco in the summer. I inquired at B. Altman's in New York and they gave me a booklet published by Holiday magazine that gave many suggestions as to what type of clothes were suitable in the various parts of the United States, Canada and Bermuda at different seasons of the year. It is a most complete little booklet and if it is still available, I'm sure it would be of great help.
M. G.

Where can I find very small quantities of old wallpaper reproductions—preferably in tiny patterns—for the backs of cupboards? P. B. D.

Few wallpaper concerns sell less than a roll of wallpaper. However, many of them have old sample books and odds-and-ends that they will be glad to give you. I suggest that you drop in at a few stores and see if they haven't an old book of samples of the type you want.

In answer to G.'s recent question about cleaning chimneys, a cupful of common salt thrown on the fire when it's hot will clean the chimney and also smother chimney fires. With soft coal, I use a cupful weekly. C. H. W.

I've always understood that abrasive powders should not be used on the new porcelain of a sink. However, I've never found out what should be used instead. For example, what else removes the black marks made by aluminum saucepans? S. L. R.

The "scratchless" type of cleansing powder is safe to use on porcelain. Nice way to clean it is with such powder and a dampened cellulose sponge, but a soft brush or soft porous cloth may be used instead. Often slight stains can be bleached out of the surface by rubbing with a cut lemon, sifting on salt, and letting it remain for awhile.

Can you give me some tips on the care of nylon undergarments, how to keep them white, for instance, and to remove stains? T. J.

Uusually nylon can be kept nice and white just by laundering it frequently but separately from colored things and using water softeners in hard water. Colors that seem fast often leave just enough discoloration to give white nylon an off-white tinge. Water softeners prevent the deposit of curds of insoluble soap which may give material a gray cast.

Laundering by hand is the best idea if nylon garments have delicate trimmings and construction. Machine washing is practical if seam construction and trim show no likelihood of fraying.

Strong bleaches should be used carefully as they will weaken nylon (as well as other fabrics). When necessary, use a mild bleach (such as sodium perborate) or a stronger bleach in the minimum amount recommended for cotton.

Bluing white nylon is needless. However, the garment will suffer no harm when washed in the same water with others that require bluing.

Soap and water will take out most stains. For chewing gum, some greases and stains with an oil base, use cleaning fluid.

Some time ago, a reader wrote in about painting peasant designs on furniture. She might be interested in the 24 Pennsylvania Dutch designs mentioned on pages 22 and 66 of the American Home for August 1949. (If she can't locate one in the home of a friend, she should be able to find it at the Public Library.)

Your Figure, Madame

All in Favor of Normal Weight, Curves Say 'Aye'

By Ida Jean Kain

When Judy Garland regained her health and came happily back to work, her studio rejoiced with her . . . and promptly ordered her to reduce. On again, off again, thin again . . . "nerves" again.

By way of background . . . some months ago Judy, overworked and far too thin to look her best even in pictures, took time out for a rest cure and to gain some much-needed weight. This she did and got back her bounce. The movie czars then declared her too healthy. Judy obediently promised to cut down her health by 15 pounds.

Well, when they succeeded in getting her thin and hollow-cheeked again, if all is not serene on the set they'll term it temperament. Temperament my eye! It's nervous exhaustion. In Hollywood they insist the actresses be as thin as ectoplasm, and yet be able to stand up under a grueling schedule that would kill off Mighty Joe Young. It takes a little reserve weight and some padding over the nerve endings to prevent the nervous jitters.

Test Is Measured

Why can't they let this young woman be pleasingly plump and keep her weight and health up? Judy isn't the ultra-streamlined type anyway. Remember how happy she looked singing "Over the Rainbow" . . . which, incidentally, won her an Oscar.

The real test is measurements. It's true that in the movies the figure photographs heavier by about 10 pounds. But that can be remedied with exercise to keep muscles compact and hugging the figure, particularly the waistline. An exercise routine of shaper-uppers will do the trick beautifully. Let the studio restrict her waist measure, not her weight.

It's not only the movies that draw the line too fine on weight. Fashion does too.

They Look Hungry

The fashion models, for all their high pay, don't look as if they ate regularly. Model requirements call for girls of 5 feet 7 or 8 inches, weighing about 115 pounds. It's small wonder a model's career is short and sweet.

It's no secret that most of them are so thin they have to resort to padding to fill out the chest measurement, to give the appearance of normal curves. And that's the blushing truth. Normal curves do not go with extreme underweight.

I ask you, why should it be fashionable to be unhealthily thin? It's against nature. Why can't we settle for n o r m a l weight, a slender waist and natural curves? All in favor . . .

Enough weight gives Judy Garland more bounce. Plump and pretty, right, she appears far happier than when she is too thin, as at left, in the opinion of Ida Jean Kain.

Removing Junior's Fingermarks

It is next to impossible to scrub white woodwork after each day's onslaught by the 3-year-old; there would be no paint left on the wood. The fingermarks will come off easily if wiped with a cloth dampened with kerosene. It will require no scrubbing and in consequence is no wear on the woodwork.

Pepco Earns $1.10 a Share During Year

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of Potomac Electric Power Co. totaled $4,303,222 in 1949, a gain of 12.7 percent over the previous year, it was reported yesterday.

After preferred stock dividends of $405,000, balance available for common stock was $3,898,222, equal to $1.10 a share on the 3,553,500 shares outstanding at the end of 1949. If a tax credit of about $180,000 applicable to other years were included, the net would be equal to $1.14 a share.

At the end of May, 1949, Pepco sold an additional issue of 592,250 shares.

The $1.10 net per share amply covered the regular annual dividend rate of 90 cents a share. Stock of Pepco yesterday reached a new all-time high of $15.75 a share on the Washington Stock Exchange in brisk buying.

December net of the utility was reported as $235,083, against $332,250 in the same 1948 month. Net operating revenues of $551,377 were 14.7 per cent higher than last year, but were reduced by a sliding scale adjustment of $136,198 during the month.

Absent Man Indicted on Fleece Charge

A 45-year-old man, who represented himself as a police officer and reportedly hoodwinked a market stand operator out of $1250, was indicted yesterday by the grand jury.

Complainant in the case was Dewey F. Dawson, 51, of Hyacinth, Va., who told police Wheeler and another man approached him in his room at 1225 5th st. nw. last September 9. Wheeler flashed a Metropolitan police badge and said he must go to headquarters for questioning about a crime "up town," Dawson said.

Wheeler finally agreed, however, that the matter could be straightened out if he posted $1250 bond, Dawson told police. He gave the sum to Wheeler, whom he never saw again, Dawson said.

Placed on Probation

Operator of a stand at Union Market, Dawson was placed on three years probation in October, 1948, after pleading guilty to a charge of enticing a 14-year-old boy into an alley for immoral purposes, records show.

Indicted by the grand jury on charges of manslaughter and unauthorized use of an auto was Samuel A. Mills, 21, of 130 51st st. se.

Mills was identified by police as the driver of the car which struck and killed Harry S. Dove, 37, of 222 I st. nw., last December 23 at 2d st. and Massachusetts ave. nw.

Irving Cunningham, 21, of 622 9th st. ne., his companion, also was indicted yesterday for unauthorized use of an auto.

Held for Robbery

Also included among the 36 indictments handed down by the grand jury were:

Eugene H. White, 31, of 1615 12th st. nw.; James Hawkins, 19, of 612½ N st. nw., and Garfield Wood, 40, of 929 L st. nw., were charged with the $25 robbery of Raymond Parker, operator of a gas station at 4854 Deane ave. ne., November 19.

All three also were indicted for the robbery of Fred B. Potts, manager of a gas station at 1100 11th st. se., November 22, in which they got $117. In addition, White was indicted on two charges of carrying a deadly weapon.

Mable Yancy, 45, of 1402 1st st. nw., was indicted on charges of operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. She was arrested on a search warrant December 17.

Luckily, the canvas bag they snatched contained only worthless checks

East St. Louis Ends School Segregation

East St. Louis, Ill., Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Negro and white school students went to classes together here today for the first time in 85 years.

All was harmonious as more than 100 Negro students took advantage of the East St. Louis Board of Education edict abolishing 85 years of segregation, beginning with the new semester, by enrolling in six schools previously reserved for whites. Two white children transferred to a school that before was all Negro.

Although a demonstration sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People provoked a brief walkout by East St. Louis High School students a year ago, the changeover today was carried out, for the most part, like any other school day.

Only one of the schools, in the Alta Sita elementary district, reported a noticeable decrease in attendance of white pupils. A school spokesman said some parents apparently were worried that there might be "trouble," but a full student body was expected again by Tuesday. There was a drop in normal attendance of about 25 percent today.

Acting Police Chief George Dowling said extra police activity for the occasion was only "routine precaution."

But extra vigilance proved to be unnecessary. The only sign that there was a change, aside from the attendance lag at the Alta Sita school, was that a few more parents than usual accompanied their children to school.

At the elementary schools, the Negroes were enrolled in the principal's office and then escorted by older white students to their new classes. Mothers stood by in many instances to watch the proceedings.

Older high school students registered themselves under the normal procedure. A 16-year-old Negro sophomore, Gus Goss, was welcomed personally by Basketball Coach Louis (Pick) Dehner. Goss is 6 feet 7 inches tall.

C. F. Scherrer, principal of the Webster School, where 28 Negroes enrolled in the largest exodus from an all-Negro school, summed up the feeling of most school officials concerning the new policy.

"No incidents would have arisen among the kids," he said. "Any trouble, if any, would have been started on the outside."

Case Filed To Test Old Racial Law

Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark F. King declined to prosecute the case for the present.

"The matter is now before the District Commissioners, as I understand it. What I do will, of course, depend on the action of the Commissioners," he said.

Last May, the Commissioners were presented with a petition from the D. C. Lawyers Guild asking for a determination as to whether the legislation passed by the D. C. Legislative Assembly to prevent restaurants, hotels, bathing houses, soda fountains and bars from refusing to sell at listed prices to all well-behaved customers regardless of race is still in effect.

On Friday, the "complaint" said, four persons sought to get lunch at the Thompson Cafeteria, 725 14th st. nw. They were denied service, according to the "complaint."

They are Dr. Mary Church Terrell, a prominent Negro educator here; Mrs. Geneva Brown, Negro, secretary-treasurer, United Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers Union; the Rev. W. H. Jernagin, Negro, pastor, Mt. Carmel Baptist Church, and David H. Scull, white.

Attorney Asks Dismissal of Poll Tax Suit

Virginia's attorney general, J. Lindsay Almond, jr., yesterday filed a motion to dismiss a suit in Federal District Court, Alexandria, challenging the validity of the State poll tax.

The suit was brought January 6 by Mrs. Jessie Butler, 55-year-old Negro housekeeper, of Halls Hill, Arlington, against Mrs. Mary A. Thompson, Arlington election registrar, and six other State and county election officials.

Mrs. Butler seeks $5000 punitive damages from Mrs. Thompson for allegedly violating her constitutional right to vote by enforcing the State election laws.

Mrs. Butler, who has not paid her poll tax, contends that on December 15, 1949, she offered to register with Mrs. Thompson, but was refused.

In moving to dismiss the suit, Almond said Mrs. Butler "seeks only equitable relief in the nature of an injunction by which the election processes of the Commonwealth of Virginia would be attempted to be controlled and regulated by the Court's order."

"A court of equity is without jurisdiction to grant equitable relief to vindicate and enforce purely political rights or to control and regulate the processes by which elections are conducted," Almond

Hearing Today On Cardozo Overcrowding

A public hearing on the proposal of School Supt. Hobart M. Corning to turn the Park View School into an annex for the overcrowded Cardozo High School will be held at 10 a. m. today by the Board of Education's committee on buildings and grounds.

Also before the committee is consideration of the transfer of the white Central High School for use of the Negro students attending Cardozo.

Seven have requested permission to appear before the committee at the hearing to be held at the Franklin Administration Building, 13th and K sts. nw.

Speakers are Jeanette Brown of the Cardozo student body; Dr. Ellis Knox, representing the Park View Parent-Teacher Association, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the United Citizens Association for Educational Adequacy for All Children. David Wells, Pleasant Plains Civic Association; James Parker, Quebec Progressive Club; Gardner Bishop, Consolidated Parent Group; John Duncan, Federation of Civic Associations; Mrs. Bathrus B. Williams, Barristers Wives

MARYLAND

300 ACRES, located in the zone of the new South Capitol Street Bridge. This bridge was opened for traffic on January 14th, and has a capacity of 50,000 motor vehicles a day. This ground is located 4 squares beyond the District line in Maryland. This bridge brings this property within about 12 minutes of the heart of Washington; 95 acres of this land can be used for cemetery. Cemetery land will retail for about $200,000 an acre. The remainder of this ground is suitable for shopping centers, apartments, and low-cost housing.

To give you an idea of what ground is worth in the zone of the Virginia end of the bridges, it is ground $500,-000 commercial property by the acre. One of the vice presidents of the Riggs National Bank bought 30 acres for $30,000 in the zone of the Memorial Bridge and sold it to the Government for $1,800,000. A farmer bought a farm over there for $3,000 and gave it to his son and he sold it for $50,000 and now it's worth $2,000,000. If you will go to the District line on the new 4-lane South Capitol st. you will see about 4 blocks away a big woods, that is the beginning of this property, and if you look to the right and left you will see about $100,000,000 worth of housing and apartment buildings right up to and adjoining my property.

This subdivision is a young man's job. I'm in my 83rd year, and I'm selling my own estate. If you've got good credit and you can pay down a small cash payment with a release clause you can pay as you go and sell. That's the way I built Chevy Chase, D. C; I bought $800,000 worth of ground there when it was all woods and now I acre of the same ground located at Conn. ave. and McKinley st. is worth a million.

Vatican Stand On Protestant Baptism Eased

Rome, Jan. 30 (NYHT). — The Vatican's Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office announced today that the Roman Catholic Church believes baptisms performed in the Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Disciples of Christ Church are valid.

The announcement will have an important effect on the attitude toward the marriages, divorces and remarriages of Catholics where members of these churches are involved.

Catholic doctrine, according to the Catholic Encyclopeadic Dictionary, holds that marriages between Catholics and non-baptised persons are invalid except where church dispensations are obtained. Today's ruling thus implied that Catholics married to members of any of the mentioned sects as a rule will be considered validly married and not able to divorce.

Msgr. Hugh O'Flaherty, of the Holy Office, inferred tonight that many other Protestant sects have such obviously valid baptisms that the Holy Office did not consider it necessary to name them.

Critics Forum Meeting

The Rev. John Tracy Ellis of Catholic University will review the book, "The Waters of Siloe" at a meeting of the Critics' Forum to be held Wednesday at 8:30 p. m. in the Mayflower Hotel. Shane MacCarthy will be chairman.

Truman Silent

U. S. Policy On Vatican Is Attacked

Continuation of American representation at the Vatican "will light the fires of passionate religious conflict," a former editor of Christian Century magazine warned yesterday.

Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, founder and former editor of the magazine, urged President Truman not to yield to "pressure" to appoint a successor to Myron C. Taylor.

Taylor, named first by President Roosevelt, resigned this month as the President's personal representative to the Vatican after holding the post for 10 years. The President has not yet announced whether he will appoint a successor.

Dr. Morrison is in Washington for the annual meeting of Protestants and other American united for separation of church and state. He will speak at a mass meeting of the group in Constitutional Hall at 8 p. m. today.

In a prepared statement, Dr. Morrison charged that the appointment of Taylor was "nothing less than executive usurpation of authority" and was "an intolerable violation of the Constitution."

Public Schools Asked to Give Church Study

Public education should include in its curriculum study of religious institutions, beliefs and activities which are factors in the culture, the Washington Ministerial Union was told yesterday.

Dr. F. Ernest Johnson, professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia University, and secretary of the Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, spoke to more than 1000 ministers at George Washington University.

"Public education," he said, "is at this moment facing something of a revolt . . . against what millions regard as an intolerable indifferenee to religion."

He emphasized that he did not advocate that the tax-supported schools "teach" religion "as a church is free to teach it."

"What is proposed is not that religion be injected into the school curriculum, but that it shall cease to be artificially ejected—especially in the social studies," he declared.

Dr. Johnson said that "only exceptionally" should there be classes devoted to religious history or institutions or religious classics.

As It Occurs

Religious subject matter, he said, should be presented "when and as it occurs."

He called the disposition on the part of "an aggressive, dogmatic, antitheistic" movement to take over the schools "the most grievous and crudest assault in our time upon the separation of church and state."

America's religious community, he went on, has been "rudely shocked" by recent Supreme Court decisions banning "released time" religious education. Dr. Johnson called attempts to construe the first amendment in "absolutist" terms "dangerous."

If ruling opinions in these cases were applied with "literal exactness," he continued, "a revolution in present and traditional practice will follow."

"The separation of religion from life is a reactionary tendency which the very persons who are now calling for it do not really, deeply and permanently, want," he said, declaring that "fear, prejudice and group anxieties have displaced reason in dealing with the problem."

Patricia Ann Carey's Condition 'Unchanged'

"Unchanged," was the report on Patricia Anne Carey's condition yesterday at Washington Sanitarium where she has been in a coma since struck by an automobile on January 5.

The 8-year-old girl, daughter of CIO secretary-treasurer, James B. Carey, was critically injured as she was crossing Piney Branch rd. at Sligo ave., Silver Spring, on her way to St. Michael's School from her home at 8 Hilltop rd.

YMCA Concert Tonight

'This I Remember'

Roosevelt Felt Stalin Distrusted U. S. at Teheran

This is another installment of the serialization of "This I Remember," the nonfiction best seller in which Eleanor Roosevelt tells the story of Franklin D. Roosevelt's career, from 1924 to his death in 1945. Succeeding installments will be printed in The Washington Post through February 4.

By Eleanor Roosevelt

BACK at Noumea I still did not know whether I was to be allowed to go to Guadalcanal or whether I was homeward bound. The last evening, after I had spent the day doing all the things he arranged for me, Admiral Halsey calmly announced that I was to be ready to leave the next morning at 8 o'clock for Efate. I was not to mention the name of the island, because the Japs had never bombed it and we had some of our biggest hospitals there. He hoped the enemy did not know we were established there. From Efate I would go to Espiritu Santo and then on to Gaudalcanal. You may be sure I was ready on time the next morning!

Finally I took off for home. I still vividly recall our landing in California and the way we were held in the plane while all outer air was shut off and we were squirted thoroughly with disinfectant.

I had been to Hawaii, Christmas Island, Penrhyn Island, Bora Bora, Aitutaki, Tutuila, Samoa, Fiji, New Caledonia; Auckland, Wellington and Roturua in New Zealand; Sydney, Canberra, Melbourne, Rockhampton, Cairns and Brisbane in Australia, Efate, Espiritu Santo and Guadalcanal.

War trip number two was ended!

Now that I've told the story of my trips to parts of the world where actual war was being fought and where of necessity one saw the results of the war in hospitals, I think I should say something of the impressions these trips left with me.

At first I could hardly bear the hospitals. There was, of course, a certain amount of sheer physical fatigue from walking miles of hospital wards day after day, but that was nothing in comparison with the horrible consciousness of waste and the feeling of resentment that burned within me. Why couldn't men sit down around a table and settle their differences without bringing suffering and death to countless youths of many nations?

I think the most horrifying hospitals are those for the men who have been mentally affected by the experiences they have undergone. I could tell myself, of course, that these men would probably have broken down under other circumstances, that something must be wrong with our civilization to make young people so vulnerable to mental illness. Nevertheless my horror at seeing people who had broken mentally and emotionally kept me awake many nights.

Didn't Want Pity

THERE were times in the other hospitals when it was hard to accept the gallantry of the men themselves without showing how deeply sorry I was for them. I knew that pity was the last thing they wanted and that their brave front of casual cheerfulness was put on to prevent people from showing that they were sorry.

These are the thoughts that I brought back from my visit to the South Pacific. The trip left a mark from which I think I shall never be free. It is because there must be thousands of men and women in this country who are similarly affected by their experiences during the war, that I have hope we may eventually build the kind of future so many men suffered and died for.

One other development gives me great hope for the future. Women have always come to the fore in wartime, but I think in World War II they took responsibility in more fields than ever before. In factories, on the farms, in business and in the military services they played a valuable role. They were an indispensable part of the wartime life of the country. This was true in Great Britain, in Australia, in New Zealand, in France, in all occupied countries in Europe, in Russia and in the United States. Women have become conscious also of the need to take part in the political life of their countries. In the European countries, more women are today playing an active part in public life than would have been possible before the war, and I am sure we are going to see great developments in the Asiatic area, too. To me, this is a very hopeful sign, for women will work for peace as hard as they worked for war.

That autumn, on November 9, there was a ceremony in the East Room of the White House in which my husband took great pride. He believed in dramatizing special occasions, and when the 44 nations signed the agreement for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, he insisted that it be done with pomp and ceremony. I was particularly glad of the chance to witness the beginning of this giant organization, which was to bring relief to so many people before it came to an end.

On November 11 Franklin took off on his second war trip. He was to meet the Generalissimo and Madame Chiang in Cairo. This was to be his first meeting with the Generalissimo. Madame Chiang was to act as interpreter. Elliott was ordered to join his father for part of the time, and John Boettiger, who was in the Army in Italy, was also detailed to be with him. Mr. Churchill met Franklin in Cairo, and the talks went well.

Because at that time the U. S. S. R. was not at war with Japan, Marshal Stalin was reluctant to meet with the head of the Chinese government; consequently when the talks in Cairo were over Mr. Churchill, Franklin, Elliott and John Boettiger proceeded to Teheran to meet Marshal Stalin without the Chiangs. This was the first meeting between Marshal Stalin and my husband. Franklin was determined that, if possible, there was going to be good will and understanding between them.

Meeting a Challenge

FROM his talks with me before he left on this trip I judged Franklin was very much intrigued with the thought of meeting Marshal Stalin. He considered the meeting a challenge, knowing well how suspicious the government representatives of the U. S. S. R. were. Because he knew that Stalin himself assumed much of the responsibility in the command of the army and the strategy of the fighting. Franklin accepted reluctantly the Marshal's refusal to go farther away from home than Teheran. This acceptance on my husband's part was added proof that he was going to exert himself to the utmost to win the confidence of Stalin himself and to establish, if possible, a better relationship between the Soviet Union and the United States.

After Franklin had been in Teheran a day, the Marshal insisted, because of rumors of unrest among the native people of Iran, that the President move into the same area where he had his quarters. Mr. Churchill was next door, Stalin said, and the Russian soldiers could more easily protect them all.

Afterward my husband told me he felt a great distrust on the part of Marshal Stalin when they first met. When they parted he had no idea whether or not he had been able to dissipate this wariness, but, he added to me, he intended to see that we kept our promises to the letter. He hoped that Great Britain would also be able to, and said he would do all he could to help them do so. In keeping our word to the letter he felt that we might gain the confidence of the leader of a great people fighting on our side. The U. S. S. R. needed all the help that we, with our great power of production, could provide; we, on the other hand, were more than grateful for the fact that the Russian troops kept so many German divisions busy.

My husband enjoyed this first contact with Mr. Stalin. It was always a challenge to him to meet new people whom he knew he had to win to his own point of view, but this encounter was very important. I know he was impressed by the strength of Mr. Stalin's personality. On his return he was always careful in describing Mr. Stalin to mention that he was short and thick-set and powerful and gave the impression of being a bigger man than he actually was. He also said that his control over the people of his country was unquestionably one brought about by their trust in him and the confidence that he had their good at heart. It is hard to describe what gives a man a quality of leadership but I am sure my husband felt that Marshal Stalin had this quality.

I have often thought that these three men, Stalin, Churchill and Roosevelt, in their very different ways, were extraordinarily good people to be thrown together to achieve success in this war. All of them, without any question, led their people and gave so unstintingly of their own strength that they inspired confidence and respect.

Difficult for Stalin

IT WAS probably difficult for Marshal Stalin to forget some of the things the great leader of the United Kingdom had said in the past and the fact that we had joined with the British in occupying part of Russia's northern territory at the end of the First World War did not make it any easier to bring about cordial relations. However in 1933 by husband had recognized the U. S. S. R., which had been isolated since 1918 and I am sure that at Teheran he made Marshal Stalin feel that his good will was genuine. After this meeting the cooperation among the three men grew steadily closer.

Beer-Drinking Slump Hurts British Treasury

London, Jan. 30 (AP).—A slump in beer drinking has cost the British treasury 20 million pounds (56 million dollars).

A. J. Dyer, chairman of London's organized inn keepers, said today beer sales for the first 11 months of 1949 totaled 23,924,546 barrels.

This was 1,500,000 less than in the same period of 1948. The treasury tax is 10 pounds ($28) a barrel.

Dyer blames high taxes for the decline. Average cost of a pint of British beer is 1 shilling 6 pence (21 cents) of which 9 pence (10.5 cents) is tax.

Hildreth Breaks Record in Quest For Circus Thrills

London, Jan. 30 (U.P.).—Melvin D. Hildreth of Washington, D. C., past president of "Circus Fans of America," broke his own long distance record for taking in circuses today.

He flew across the Atlantic to see the Bertram Mills show.

Hildreth, 59, has driven across the United States to see a new act and has visited the big tents in Cuba, Haiti, France, England, Switzerland and Italy.

"Hello, Daddy Hildreth," she shouted, waving to her favorite fan.

Hildreth was too scared to move.

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

An Explanation for an Old Adage

Ernie Simon, the local lad who made good in Chicago radio and TV, observes that the reason politics makes strange bedfellows is that they all get used to the same bunk.

SILVER LINING

So you noticed a silver dollar in the California bottle in the Capitol Theater's polio stand, eh? Well, here's the story of how it got there.

When George E. Outland was a member of Congress from California, he and his family lived in Alexandria. Son George F. Outland dropped a silver dollar into the California jar the first year the stand was erected in front of the theater, and continued the habit in each succeeding year.

After Congressman Outland and his family moved back to Santa Barbara, son George returned to Washington frequently enough to make his yearly contributions.

But this year his visit and the polio drive didn't coincide. So he mailed a silver dollar to Aaron "Speedy" Freeman of 13 W. Chapman st., Alexandria, Va., together with a note requesting Speedy to pinch-hit for him.

And there you have the story of how one silver dollar got into the California bottle. Now would anybody like to make it two?

PET PEEVE

Herb Harris of 1121 N. Kensington st., Arlington, Va., muses:

"The cleverest fellow around is the gent who fiendishly plans folding guide maps in such a way that the place you're looking for is always on the crease of the folded section."

SUGGESTION BOX

P. D. Weeks of 1229 New York ave. nw. turns up his nose at the fiscal program for Capital Transit that I outlined recently. He thinks he has a better idea.

Instead of my popcorn machines, earmuffs, lending library and baby-sitter service, District Liner Weeks would raise the price of the weekly pass to $3.50, with this proviso:

"Passengers holding passes would have first priority on seats. Those paying the single-fare rate would have to yield their seats on demand of any passholder."

This would indeed bring in a great deal of revenue, because lots of people are so tired after a day's work that they'd gladly pay extra for the privilege of sitting.

What's more, the idea is entirely consistent with our American tradition of extra-fare trains, parlor cars, Pullmans, box seats, and tips to headwaiters who otherwise cannot find an unreserved table vacant.

The fellow who can afford to let $10 bills run interference for him usually has no trouble shouldering his way through the crowd.

So why not special rates for the privilege of sitting on streetcars? Carrying the idea to its logical conclusion, for an extra 25 cents Capital Transit might supply your window with a windshield-wiper device on rainy days, so that you could see how many blocks past your stop you had ridden; or

For a modest fee—perhaps a nickel—the operator might be prevailed upon to call out the stops; or

For a group rate of 50 cents, to be collected from among the standees, an incentive bonus might be paid to all operators who start and stop so gently that not a single passenger is thrown to the floor; or

For a dollar, a passenger would be permitted to turn off the Transit Radio receiver for 30 minutes.

There are lots of ways that Capital Transit could make more money, if it just used a little ingenuity.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Small, all-white 10-week-old kitten." (Hudson 4179).

"Adorable little male cat, about 3 months old, apartment trained; looks like little zebra." (Columbia 7970.)

"Gentle, beautiful 4-year-old German shepherd, related to Rin Tin Tin; outdoor dog, needs fenced yard." (Wisconsin 2758.)

ADD SIGNS

"Speaking of restaurant signs," writes Maj. G. J. Winters, USA ret., of 4004 Beecher st. nw., "the one with the most pointed message is the classic: "'In God We Trust—All Others Cash'."

'TIS TRUE, 'TIS PITY

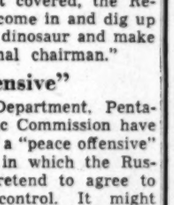
Dingell Urges Strong Tax Staff

By Drew Pearson

Before President Truman cut loose against tax evaders in his message to Congress he got some rugged pointers from Representative John Dingell of Michigan.



Rep. Dingell

"The costliest 'economy' move ever made by Congress was when it lopped 7000 Internal Revenue agents off the payroll two years ago," Dingell told the President. "This was an open invitation to dishonest taxpayers to cheat the Government.

"We saved twenty million dollars by that cut, but it cost the Government about 600 million dollars in uncollected taxes. In other words, for every dollar saved by the penny-pinchers in Congress we lost $30 in tax frauds."

Dingell added that most of the discharged agents have been rehired, "but we are still paying for that mistake." As a result of the cut, he said, some 300,000 cases of tax frauds, many of which were close to completion, had to be dropped or pigeonholed by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Millikin Joke

Solemn-looking Senator Eugene Millikin of Colorado is a conservative Republican but he delights in cracking sly jokes about the national GOP leadership.

A few days ago, Senator Millikin was discussing a big hue and cry in his home State of Colorado over the proposed Echo Park dam. One citizens' group complained the dam would cover up "dinosaur beds."

"Ah, well," sighed Millikin, "if the beds aren't covered, the Republicans will come in and dig up the bones of a dinosaur and make him the national chairman."

"Peace Offensive"

The State Department, Pentagon and Atomic Commission have been alerted to a "peace offensive" from Moscow, in which the Russians would pretend to agree to international control. It might come in a dramatic announcement from the Kremlin that the USSR had perfected a hydrogen bomb.

The strategy behind the "peace offensive" is to confuse American opinion and delay the H-bomb project. The Russians may say, for example, we know how to make the H-bomb, but for humanity's sake we won't make one if you don't.

All this came up at a secret session of the National Security Council at which President Truman made it clear that we cannot agree to any international control plan that does not include inspection.

Meanwhile, it is definitely established that the theory of the hydrogen bomb is no secret. The first "leak" from the United States was an article by John McCloy, then Assistant Secretary of War, in 1946 revealing we had plans for such a bomb. The piece was written for an obscure Army Ordnance publication.

Furthermore, Senator Douglas of Illinois, in no way connected with atomic research, explained to a bug-eyed atomic official, the whole theory of the H-bomb, and he had merely figured it from reading Einstein and the Smyth report.

Douglas, incidentally, said that he had pondered long over the hydrogen bomb and had come to the conclusion we must make the bomb.

Meanwhile, Chariman Lilienthal will soon be available for a lecture tour in opposition to the H-bomb.

Miners Grumble

A $33-a-week cut in wages and a sick industry are back of the swelling chorus of miners' grumbles against their one-time god, John L. Lewis.

The revolt against the aging Lewis is so strong in Pennsylvania and West Virginia that his old crony, CIO President Phil Murray, could snatch the miners away from him. Murray is a former UMW lieutenant who broke with Lewis.

The miners are chiefly up in arms over the three-day week, which reduces their take-home pay from $78 a week to $45, but the three-day week is a desperate move by Lewis and the opertaors—whom he curses in public and talks with in private—to stave off anarchy and a cuthroat price war in an ailing industry.

Industry Sickness

Studies by the Bureau of Mines—locked up in the files so they won't be used in the Lewis name-calling battles—reveal how sick the industry is. Privately, the bureau expects to see a return of the ghost towns that haunted the coal areas in the 30s.

1. Over capacity.
2. High cost.
3. Competition from natural gas and oil.

In the war years, when Nazi subs were sinking oil transports, the railroads used 135 million tons of bituminous coal a year—now the railroads have cut to 70 million tons.

In the home-heating field, while new residences have gone up at an amazing rate, coal consumption has gone down slightly. This is because oil and natural-gas heating is being installed in new buildings, particularly along the Eastern Seaboard.
